AFTER the tariff bill has been disposed of, what? Why, adjournment. Congressmen and the people are about tired out.

THE Prohibitionists will not support Pattison. Charles S. Wolfe's following in this compaign consists of himself and Mr. Wolfe.

WHO was it that lowered the valuation on real estate and lowered the rate of taxation one third? A Republican board of commissioners. The voters see it and they will manifest their approval at the polls this fall.

IT will only be a few more weeks until the word comes from Europe that William A. Wallace is too sick to return in time to support the Democratic ticket. The fact is, however, that the ticket is too sick for Wallace to bother with it.

WHO was it that illegally appropriated money belonging to the school districts in the various townships throughout the county and also to the state? A democratic board of commissioners. Voters, do you want any more of that kind of work?

THE big majority given Speaker Reed crushes the story that Secretary Blaine would fight him at the polls. In the past Mr. Blaine has always worked for the Republican party and never sulked no matter how treated, and can be counted upon to work for it in the future much more surely than that the party will deserve his help.

THE office of County Commissioner is a highly responsible one, requiring good business qualifications. Ordinary common sense would seem to demand that the candidates be men who have some business experience of their own of a successful character.

Try the candidates by this rule and the Republican party in this county need have no fear of the result.

ISN'T it about time that the democratic party gets up another $38,000 campaign lie? The one they wore threadbare last fall was so nicely disposed of by a democratic board of auditors who could not find that one cent of money collected and turned into the county treasury had been stolen, squandered, or even illegally appropriated to keep up a bogus surplus. This is more than could have been said ten years ago.

ABOUT SOME PEOPLE.

Some people have a fashion of lying in preference to telling the truth, thus proving that the gentleman called 'the dickens' has a right smart grip on them.

Some people have a fashion of telling all the ins and outs of their business to every one they meet, thus proving that they ought to take lessons from some well read man.

Some people have a fashion of gathering on the street corners in crowds until ladies shrink from passing by, thus showing that they are more thoughtless than wicked.

Some people have a fashion of coming into church just before the doxology is sung thus showing that they care more for going home with the girls than they do for the benediction.

Some people have a fashion of going out of church with a great noise before the sermon is done, thus showing that they don't think how the preacher and the congregation is annoyed thereby.

THE PENNSYLVANIA CANVASS.

Those Democrats who are basing predictions of Pattison's election upon an independent Republican vote would have much more sense if they would study the record. A comparison of the situation now with that of 1882 when Pattison was elected by the diversion of Republican votes from the regular ticket will quickly destroy the flimsy fabric of Democratic hope which seems to afford the esteemed enemy a comfort altogether disproportioned to its reality.

The Republican disaffection of 1882 was not the creation of that year. It was part of a systematic organization growing out of events covering the previous two years. The immediate aggravation was the stifling of the Blaine sentiment of Pennsylvania in the State Convention of 1880. The convention was called hurriedly two or three months ahead of the usual time. The delegates to it were largely chosen by county committees, the sentiment of the people being little regarded in the selection. One of the first acts of the convention was to pass a resolution instructing the delegation to the National Convention to vote as a unit for Grant for President. And this was in face of the fact that the preference of the Republicans of the State was overwhelmingly for Blaine. That was the basis for discontent with the party management which early bore fruit.

It was followed in the Winter of 1881 by the disaffection of enough Republican members of the Legislature to defeat the caucus nominee for United States Senator. When the caucus candidate was withdrawn and another put in his place he, too, was beaten, although nothing could be alleged against the personal character or ability of either. The result was a compromise, by which then Congressman John I. Mitchell was chosen. He was regarded as in sympathy with those who had antagonized the caucus nominations, and subsequent events proved him to be. This fact gave strength and prestige to the disaffection, and it held together in a way that it could hardly have done under other circumstances.

That year Gen. S M Baily, who had been one of the famous 306 suppporters of Grant in the National Convention, was nominated for State Treasurer over W T Davies, who had been one of the anti caucus members of the Legislature the previous Winter. C S Wolfe immediately announced himself as an independent candidate for State Treasurer, declaring that the black flag had been raised against the independent Republicans. An independent State Committee was at once created, nearly every county being represented upon it. Mr. Wolfe stumped the State and polled 49,984 votes. Nothing saved Gen. Baily but the fact that the Democrats did not cordially support their own candidate.

The vote given Wolfe greatly encouraged the disaffected Republicans. As early as January, 1882, four months before the Republican nominations for that year were made, it was practically determined to put an independent ticket in the field. The work of the independent organization had been continued throughout the State, and, although many concessions had been made in the matter of changing the rules, and in face of the fact that Gen. Beaver was nominated by acclamation, with no opposing candidate in the convention, the independent ticket was launched. It led to the election of the Democratic nominees, the results of which are familiar enough to all who concern themselves with public affairs.

The situation is vastly different today. There is no such revolt as was then manifest. The independent State organization of that time, which, as we have shown, was the result of two full years' work, has had no existence for eight years. The leading men who encouraged that movement are not now in sympathy with the present disaffection. On the contrary, they are earnest and enthusiastic supporters of Senator Delamater, including the chairman and secretary of the 1882 committe. The uprising of eight years ago was the result of persistent organization, and of an aggravated feeling, and neither exists to-day. Whatever disaffection there is now is largely attributable to personal grievance.

There are two other facts well worth applying to this situation. Then Robt. E. Pattison was able to command the full support of his party. We do not suppose anyone will pretend he can do that to-day. Then the average Republican majority of the State had been less than one-half what it has since rown to be. The most it had given in any really contested year was the g37,276 for Garfield in 1880. It has twice since given a Republican candidate for President 80,000 It elected a Governor in 1875 by 12,030 and another in 1878 by 22,353 and since 1872 Republican candidates for State offices, running outside the Presidential years, have received not less than 42,000 majority, and last year a State Treasurer was chosen by 60,000.

Those who flippantly draw a comparison between the situation now and that of 1881 will find an instructive lesson in the facts here impartially presented. They offer no encouragement to those who have vainly held up the hope that the Republican party is to be defeated this year in the great Republican State of Pennsylvania by such insignificant, unorganized and misguided disaffection as that which is presented at this time. It has no such basis for action as that which made itself felt eighty years ago, and there is not enough of it to ruffle the situation or cause the remotest oppression in the mind of any Republican. Pennsylvania will continue at the head of the column of Republican States.—Press.

WILL ELECT THEM BOTH.

Some of our democratic contemporaries, as well as many other democrats are desirous of knowing 'which nominee for Commissioner the republicans will elect?' That is a very easy question to answer. We will elect them both, and we will elect them both because they are the men that will make the best officials and because the people of Centre county now understand that the time has come when a republican board of commissioners is not only preferable but is a veritable necessity.

Last week we told our readers why James Strohm should and would be elected. This week we say that there are just as strong reasons why D. B. Kunes, of Blanchard, should be elected Mr. Kunes comes from a part of the county that has not for years been represented in the administration of the county affairs, a place which is now justly entitled to such representation. He has always been a straightout, hard-working republican, always devoting time and money to help in any campaign. More than that Mr. Kunes has proven, by his own personal record, that he is a good business man and one who is entirely able to successfully manage the affairs of the county. That Mr. Kunes, if elected, would do his utmost to continue the present low rate of taxation and observe the strictest economy in the disbursing of the county's funds, is a foregone conclusion and this fact alone, regardless of the fact that Mr. Kunes has many warm friends throughout the county and is a gentleman for whom all can vote, is one reason why he should and will receive the united support of the republican party as well as a large following of democrats.

WHAT GENERAL HASTINGS SAID

A member of leading democratic papers throughout the State are crediting General Hastings with saying things in his speech at Pittsburgh last Saturday night which the General never said, and which the very journals that are making the fuss about it know he never said, Gen. Hastings is a republican—a true, brave, noble and loyal republican—and yet with all that he would not for one moment think of making the assertion he is accredited with, and all who know the man know he wouldn't. The speech the General made at Pittsburgh was one of the best speeches we ever read and if we had the space to permit would reproduce it in full but we must be content with giving the parts of it that bear most on the point under discussion and to the truthfulness of which we invite the attention of both democrats and republicans:

Mr. Chairman and fellow citizens: I am a Republican, and if devotion to the principles of Republicanism counts for anything I am in good standing in my party. I was born a Republican, and if I had not been I would have sought the first opportunity to have been born again. I believe in the principles and I glory in the traditions of our beloved party. And when you hear it said to you that the Republican party will not be victorious in this campaign the man who speaks to you reckons without the greatest Republican host in any State in the Union. (Applause.) Pennsylvania is and has been the bulwark of Republicanism. Why the ought to be! In her Eastern metropolis she holds the cradle of American liberty, and in this great Western metropolis the Republican party had its original birth and baptism. (Applause.) Pennsylvania has always headed, year in and year out, the Republican majorities, and she will not forget herself this fall.

PATTISON'S PERSONAL PLATFORM.

The distinguished gentleman who heads the Democratic ticket has undertaken to place his campaign upon a low level, and personality and abuse unworthy of him—unworthy of any honorable foeman. In his letter of acceptance he undertakes to give the Democratic party credit for the formation, the construction, the inventing of the fundamental laws which are now the Constitution of this State. He does not say that in his formal letter of acceptance; he says it in his real letter of acceptance published in an interview in the New York World. In that interview he undertakes to say and point out specifically that a large amount of money has been purloined from the treasury of this State; he rakes from the dead ashes of the past issues that have been trampled under foot time and time again by the popular vote in this state. But if every word he says in that letter of acceptance was true, and if the Republican party or its representative had taken from the Treasury every dollar, as he untruthfully alleges, I say to you that it would not amount in dollars and cents to one-half as much money as he cost the people of this State in his effort by an extra session of the Legislature, to accomplish a selfish purpose in the redistricting of the State for Congressional purposes, among other things, for the single important purpose of legislating out of official position and office a Democratic tariff member of Congress from Philadelphia—the late Samuel J. Randall. The old soldier remembers with indignation his vote of the Indignent Soldier's Pension bill, when he remembers that the amount of money squandered in that extra session was sufficient to pay the expenses of every worn-out old soldier not only in Pennsylvania, but in every state in the Union, from the time he fixed his veto to that bill down to the present time! [Applause.

PATTISON FORGOT HIMSELF.

My fellow citizens, the Republican party is again in conflict with the head of the Democratic candidacy with reference to taxation in this State. I recognize the lateness of the hour and I will only say one word to you. [Cries of "Go ahead."] The Democratic party attempts, among other things, to hold the Republican party for what Mr. Pattison calls discrimination against the farming people of this State. He says in his letter of acceptance, to wit, that interview in the New York World, that the Republican party is assuming to crush out of existence the farmer by unjust discrimination and by overburdening taxation; but, my fellow citizens, he forgot to say that our present tax law, the present revenue law of the State, the law which takes from the farmer whatever taxes he is required to pay for the public good, Mr. Pattison forgets to say to you that that law, passed in 1885, bears the sanction of his official signature as Governor of Pennsylvania. [Applause.] In the last State Convention the Republican party committed itself to such a revision of our revenue laws as that they will make the burden of taxation rest more lightly and easily upon the farmer. The plank in the platform was submitted to the leading agriculturists of the State and met with their approval, and when the next Republican Legislature shall meet, that platform will be enacted into law and the Republican party will again keep its pledge and that law will bear the official sanction of the then Governor of Pennsylvania.

IT WONT WASH.

The Watchman's article last week trying to explain away the charges made by this paper and also trying to sustain its own false assertions was a very lame attempt and wont go down with the ordinary voter. Last spring our contemporary attempted to misconstrue the Centre county statement as sworn to by a board of democratic auditors for the political benefit of its own party but at the time the reasons were too apparent and the most prominent members of the democratic party knew the Watchman was wrong. Now it is at it again and the very fact that it has this time started out on the same old line of accusation stamp it at once as being hard up for material on which to run this fall's campaign.

As to the surplus in the treasury when the last county statement was printed it was almost as large as when the democrats went out of power and what is more it was all a legal bona fide surplus, not money belonging to the State and townships and illegally appropriated to the use of the county for the purpose of swelling the surplus.

The record of Messrs. Henderson and Decker needs no "blowing up" from us. It speaks for itself. The books will show what they have done and are still doing and the taxpayers and voters, at the polls next November, will sanction the record and administration of the past three years by electing both of the republican candidates.

Was It a Murder?

This morning about 9 o'clock when Orval Smith, who lives on the bank of the river near the intersection of Main and Water streets, was going out in the boom to gather driftwood, he saw what he supposed was the carcass of an animal lying on the bank near the edge of the water, a short distance below Lowery's house, but just as he passed the stump behind which it lay, he was startled to see that it had shoes on, and on going closer he saw the remains of a man lying face down, with outstretched arms, the left arm off at the elbow, skull bare of flesh, ribs exposed and a railroad tie lying across the right leg. This Mr. Smith removed. The only clother on him were a pair of pantaloons, all rotted and which clung to his legs and a good pair of shoes and stockings covered his feet. Mr. Smith notified Corner Mader, who had the remains of the unfortunate man taken to Sloan's undertaking establishment, after which he empaneled the following jury: George W Batcheler, Robert Martin, Michael Wantz, James K Corss, A W Rokenbrode and M J McNerney. After viewing the body they adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon, when they arrived at a verdict in accordance with the facts.

As to the identity of the unfortunate deceased that is a mystery which may never be cleared up. The only person who was drowned up the river this year and not found, that we know of, was a Mr. Leininger, who was drowned near Keating last spring, together with a peddler were afterwards found. The shoes that were found on the dead man's feet will be retained for identification. The body was interred this afternoon in Highland cemetery.—Tuesday's Lock Haven Democrat.

Come to Centre County.

If nine Democrats can be found in the State who will not vote for Pattison they should immediately get together and form a base ball club. As a curiosity they would be an immense drawing card. —Harrisburg Patriot.

Come to Centre county brother and we will pick you out enough of such democrats to make contending clubs enough to play all week without one man playing two games.

Our Story Teller

THE EXILES

A RUSSIAN STORY.

Swift as the lightning, the two sledges, without leaving a trace, glided anew over the icy stretch. Nadege, her eyes red with weeping and her heart sad, silently and sorrowfully thought of her dear Ladislas. She could not believe him lost. A secret presentiment told her to hope and that she would, perhaps, see him again. M. Lafleur, usually so loquacious, was also silent. Plunged in his reflections, with lowered head and compressed lips, he internally consoled himself for the present by thinking of the future. He was busy making plans.

His mind, with the rapidity of the electric spark, sped from Yakoutsk to the ice of the pole, from the pole to Paris, upon the Place de la Bastille lighted up by that bright sun of Thermidor sung of by Beranger, and from Paris to Chateau-Thierry, in the little house he had inherited from his maternal uncle. It was in this house that M. Lafleur intended to found the museum which was to bear his name and attract, every summer, caravans of visitors to the town which gave birth to the great French fable-writer. The former dancing-master had definitively renounced his idea of seizing upon the first occasion that should present itself to return and solicit his pardon, that he might continue to teach country-dances and good manners to the daughters of the high Siberian functionaries. True, the affairs of his millinery shop remained to be settled, but that was not much. He willingly sacrificed his profits. Being a man of foresight, M. Lafleur had not kept his savings in a stocking in the depths of a drawer; neither had he entrusted them to the Jewish usurers of the country. Twice a year, at collection time, he had sent, by the hands of a reliable agent, his funds to Paris, to the address of a solid and honorable house—the house of Vernes et Co.

M. Lafleur, so far as worldly wealth was concerned, was, therefore, exempt from care, and he was approaching an age when it is permitted to a man to repose and enjoy the fruit of his toil. He had yet a very long road to travel over to return to Paris and Chateau-Thierry; but, at the rate at which he was going, the distance was, so to speak, visibly diminishing.

At his side, Yermac, well wrapped in his furs, kept his eyes closed and seemed asleep. He was as motionless and stiff as a frozen corpse.

Directed by Yegor, who took his eyes neither from his compass nor the little map sketched by him at the ostrog from a wall map, prepared by the Esaoule in accordance with the most reliable information he had been able to gather, Tekel drove so admirably that the fugitives were enabled to follow the surest and shortest route.

The teams of dogs, furnished by the Esaoule of Sredne-Kolimsk, did marvels in the hands of Tekel and Chort. The dogs of the north of Siberia have long and slenders ears, always erect, and their tails are thick. Some have smooth hair and others curly hair of different shades.

At the head of each team was the most active and best disciplined dog. It kept the others, less intelligent or more stubborn, in the right direction, preventing them, especially, from turning aside from the road to follow the tracks of animals.

Once, Yegor's animals precipitated themselves on the footprints of a fox marked upon the snow; already, the dogs were howling with all their might and it seemed as if nothing could arrest them—when the leader, turning in the opposite direction, commenced to bark as if it had seen some animal worthier of pursuit.

Tekel and Chort encouraged their dogs by whistling and by cries peculiar to themselves, to which the intelligent creatures had soon become accustomed. They drove in the Siberian fashion without using a whip. The whip is replaced by the ostle, a stout rod four feet long, tipped with iron at its lower end. The drivers hurl the ostle at lazy or disobedient dogs and pick it up very adroitly as they pass it.

Each dog of the teams belonging to the settled tribes of Siberia has a complete little set of harness, consisting of a wide belt across the chest, by means of which it pulls. This belt is kept in place by another strap, fastened to it and passing around the body of the animal. The whole is attached to the principal strap by a short trace. The sledge dogs are accustomed to utter a prolonged howl at the moment of setting out.

It was with an ample supply of dried fish that the fugitives fed their dogs. Their own food was neither more agreeable nor of better quality.

When the sledges stopped that day, Tekel sought for a suitable place in which to pass the rest of the day and the night. He soon returned, making a sign to Yegor to advance. The spot was perfectly sheltered. They felled several poplar trees to form a rampart. In the corner of this rampart was erected the pologue intended for Nadege, the interior of which was promptly heated by means of a lamp. They broke the ice of the Kolima to obtain water; this ice was as yet but two feet thick. A great bivouac fire, fed with wood furnished by the neighboring trees, spread warmth about it. The most important thing now was to put something comforting and substantial on this fire.

Yegor and Tekel took each a gun and, preceded by Wab, plunged cautiously, with watchful eyes, into the bushes and thickets in search of feathered or furred game. The Yakoute, with the instinct of the savage, examined the leaves of the bushes to see if they did not bear marks of the bites of deer or elk. Sometimes he paused and listened attentively, signing to Yegor to remain silent and motionless. Wab, like the docile and intelligent dog it was, held itself in readiness, its paws uplifted, interrogating with a look its master and the Yakoute.

Tekel suddenly dropped quickly and, hiding behind the trunk of a tree, remained motionless, squatting in the snow. He was evidently watching some animal. Yegor, his finger on the trigger of his gun, stood ready to act at the first signal.

After a minute had elapsed, the Yakoute arose and signed to his master to follow him.

They descended towards the river.

"Deer tracks!" said Yegor, in a whisper, pointing to imprints on the snow.

Tekel shook his head.

"These are elk tracks," answered he, in a low tone. "The hoofs are slender, straight, deeply cleft and united at the top by a membrane which permits the foot to spread and place itself, without sinking, on the fresh snow or the moist soil."

Yegor knew that elk, like stags, always go in herds of from fifteen to twenty. He ardently hoped that he and his companion might succeed in killing, at least, one of the agile and courageous animals. The male elk attains the size of an ox, and weighs as much as twelve hundred pounds. Its huge, elongated head, terminated by a thick and wide muzzle which gives it the face of an ass, is crowned with antlers which widen into a triangular top in the form of a shovel. The elk is, after the reindeer, the animal most useful to the tribes of the north. Its flesh is smoked and preserved, its firm and pliant skin serves to make garments, and its hard and brilliantly white bones are employed to manufacture different instruments.

Yegor and Tekel had reached a spot where the very abrupt bank towered perpendicularly above the river. A hundred yards from there, they saw through the scattered aspens and cedars a little glade invaded by blackberry bushes, thyme, red heath and heath with black berries called chikcha and bordered with willows. Hidden behind some eglantine bushes, the two hunters, who had noticed that all the footprints converged to this point, waited. Suddenly, Wab gave a start and was about to leap, but Yegor's hand restrained the animal in time. An elk, of huge proportions, came out from under the willows, followed by its family numbering seven—an old female without horns, two full-grown animals with hair already thick, two young animals and two fawns.

Yegor and Tekel heard the snow crack beneath their hoofs. The male advanced first; it stopped at the edge of the forest, bent down a birch tree with its antlers, broke off the top and ate the branches.

Yegor and the Yakoute, who were not in the direction of the wind, took advantage of this moment to aim their guns and fire simtaneously.

A flash lighted up the darkness beneath the branches, Wab bounded forward with a howl, and the female at which Tekel had aimed fell, uttering a hollow groan. The full-grown animals fled, followed by the fawns. As to the male which Yegor had wounded in the shoulder, it ran a short distance and then suddenly stopped to attack those who had attacked it.

But Wab leaped upon it.

Feeling the dog's teeth in its throat, the elk leaped among the thickest trees, hoping to make its adversary loosen its hold by dashing it against the trunks.

The brave Wab would certainly have been crushed, if Yegor, starting suddenly forward, had not fired a second ball into the head of the elk, which fell dead.

"The prize is ours!" cried Tekel, running up, armed with his knife.

"And a magnificent prize it is, too!" said Yegor, measuring the length of the animal with his eye.

"We will carry away only the best portions," said the Yakoute, preparing to cut off the cartilaginous head, which, with the ears and tongue, is the part preferred by the people of the north.

This operation finished, Tekel skinned the animal and cut off its hind legs.

Yegor did the same for the female; and the two hunters returned joyously to the encampment, where their acquisitions were very highly appreciated.

M. Lafleur, who had never partaken of an elk's head roasted on the coals, promised himself that he would one day regale his friends with the dish, on his return to France.

CHAPTER XXII.—THE POLAR REGIONS.

Ladislas returned neither that day, nor the next, nor the succeeding days.

Yegor, M. Lafleur, and even Nadege, whose hope had held out the longest, now felt convinced that the child, lost amid the icy solitude, without food and exposed to the attacks of bears and wolves, could not have escaped death. Yegor's heart was filled with sadness whenever he thought of the little Pole.

He had nothing, however, with which to reproach himself. He had done all that lay in the power of man to recover him. To delay further would have been to imperil not only his own life but also those of Nadege and M. Lafleur, for which he held himself responsible.

The fugitives encamped several times upon the banks of the Kolima, the course of which they were following like a conducting thread.

As they advanced towards the Arctic Ocean, the shores of the river, until then rocky and even steep, grew lower. The country became more and more level, and soon the glance embraced but a toundra stretching as far as the eye could reach towards the sea and traversed by a very great number of small rivers.

They kept along an arm of the Kolima, which does not unite with the principal course of the river until it has formed a low and marshy island, on the southern shore of which is situated the ostrog of Nijni-Kolimsk. Nearly a hundred miles further on the Kolima divides itself anew into two arms. The fugitives followed the right arm, which is over five miles wide, and which is called the Kamennaya-Kolima. A little further still is found a third arm which, with the two others, forms the mouth of the Kolima. This mouth of the huge Asiatic stream covers altogether a space more than sixty miles in width.

On the fourth day, Yegor saw a young deer that had lost its way. It was the season when these animals emigrate in herds from the frozen regions of the north to more temperate countries. The hair of the deer is of a reddish brown, but it is not rare to see white deer all the year round. Yegor, who had restrained Wab, always ready to leap forward, admired the graceful bearing and light step of the young deer. The deer is much more elegant than the stag. It is distinguished from the latter by having shorter and slenderer legs, a less robust body, and a less elongated neck. When it is alone and one is in the direction opposite to the wind, one can easily approach it, for these animals, always frisky and prone to play, are neither wicky nor wicked. The young fawns, which people raise on goat's milk, tame very quickly and follow their masters with the fidelity and docility of a dog.

As they were in need of provisions to continue the journey, Yegor shot the young deer and carried away the best parts of its flesh.

Some hours later, towards the middle of the day and amid terrible cold, the fugitives arrived at the mouth of the Kamennaya-Kolima.

"The sea! the sea!" cried the two natives, drawing themselves up and pointing towards an icy stretch which was lost to the north in the mists of the sky.

"The Arctic Ocean!" said M. Lafleur, shivering despite himself as if before something fearful and mysterious.

"They will not come here to search for us!" murmured Yegor.

The Arctic landscapes are but little varied. In the wan and misty atmosphere there are no shadows; the lines of the horizon are effaced and vanish. Height and distance do not exist; the land and the sea, equally white with snow, can scarcely be distinguished one from the other; the innumerable irregularities and windings of the coast seem, in these dead and desolate regions, not to have had the time to assume decided and precise shapes. One might believe himself in the midst of a universe still in process of formation.

The silence and immobility of nature, in the vicinity of the pole, have something grand and wild about them. Yegor, Nadege and M. Lafleur, all three, were seized with a secret terror, as if upon the threshold of an unknown world.

Yermac alone, inaccessible to every emotion, remained impassible and rigid. He comprehended that, with the cold and the continuous night which would shortly begin, the surveillance of which he was the object would necessarily be relaxed. Could he escape then? Should he strive to flee, or should he wait until some unforeseen event changed the face of things?

Around the fugitives everything displayed the lugubrious imprint of polar lethargy. Not a sound, not a cry, not a breath. It was like an empty and depopulated planet destroyed by some horrible cataclysm. Afar, above mountains of ice—cylindrical masses—jutting out like promontories, white birds vague as shadows floated slowly, suggesting the wandering souls of those who are no more. The light was funereal and so feeble that objects had neither body nor color.

At last, the fugitives had reached the spot where they designed to conceal themselves during the winter. They would erect a stout hut, well sheltered from the winds of the north. It was only on the arrival of spring that they could risk traversing the country of the Tchouktchis, on their way to the Gulf of Anadyr.

On their hazardous journey sown with perils of every kind, they had lost all idea of time.

"I would like to know what part of the year it is," said M. Lafleur; "but we have kept no account of the days."

"This is the 20th of November," said the chief of police, in a tone of certainty.

"Indeed!" said Yegor. "This is the reason the days are so short. Day after to-morrow will commence a night of thirty-six days."

"A complete night!" asked Nadege, turning pale.

"Complete. The sun will reappear only on the 28th of December. I am fully informed on that point."

"But how shall we manage to live in the darkness!" demanded Nadege.

"The night will not be as dark as you imagine, Mademoiselle," said M. Lafleur, "Thanks to the power of the refraction and the gleaming whiteness of the snow, as well as the frequency of the aurora borealis, the gloom will be supportable. We shall also have the moon, which will make us ten visits every twenty-four hours. What we have to fear are the excessive cold and lack of provisions. We are now but six, since the poor little lad has not rejoined us."

"Don't count me!" said the chief of police, dryly.

"Why not?"

"Now that my arm is cured, I shall make it a point not to accept for a single day longer anything whatever from you. Alone, I shall find a way to procure my food. I do not wish to embarrass you."

"As you please," said Yegor. "Monsieur Yermac," added he, "you shall have your liberty when we abandon this spot early in the spring. That is if you do not prefer to accompany us to the Gulf of Anadyr, where we shall quit simultaneously Siberia, Russia and Asia!"

"That remains to be seen!" muttered Yermac, in a low tone.

CHAPTER XXIII.—PREPARATIONS FOR THE WINTER.

The fugitives and the chief of police paused at the edge of a small frozen river, the water of which could be drunk. On the banks of this stream they could gather drifted wood to burn during the winter. It was in the vicinity of Cape Baranoff, which bristled with rocks of strange and fantastic shapes; one fancied he saw there figures of men and gigantic animals scattered among ruined towers and dismantled and crumbling walls, which one might take for the wrecks of a fortress.

The north and north-west portions of the cape are composed of rocks of schist, plunging perpendicularly into the sea and cut here and there by narrow valleys.

To the north, bounding the horizon, were vaguely outlined huge mountains of ice, called icebergs by English and American navigators. A little in front of them stretched out a vast open space in the ice.

Upon the Siberian shores of the Arctic Ocean, one does not see immense glaciers like those of Smith's Strait. Nevertheless, as the current of the Polar Sea flows from west to east, it will readily be understood that enormous masses of ice are drawn towards Behring's Strait. From various causes, the height of the frozen mountains augments as one leaves the coast behind him.

At this spot on the shore of the Arctic Ocean the people from the banks of the Kolima stop, when they start out to hunt the fur producing animals.

There exists, between the limit they sign to themselves and that adopted by Tchouktchis, a neutral and uninhabited; very favorable for the establishment of winter camp for fur hunters.

The coast was covered with drifted wood, which could be utilized in the construction of a hut for the winter, which gave promise of being excessively severe.

Everybody assisted in erecting the hut—even Yermac. The interior was so arranged as to furnish, besides the room common to all, a chamber for Nadege, in which her pologue was erected. The men were to sleep together, in another apartment, on a sort of bed made of pieces of wood. A reindeer skin was hung over the door of the hut. Outside, a covered passage, constructed with blocks of snow, formed a screen, preventing the icy air from penetrating into the hut when anyone entered or went out. The hut, which was very low, was strengthened by means of an exterior wall of hardened snow, a precaution taken against hurricanes which, otherwise, would have swept it away. The roof, exceedingly slight despite the care bestowed upon it by the exiles, had been in like manner covered with solid cakes of snow. Finally, in front of the passage, a veritable glacis formed of enormous blocks was designed to act as an obstacle to the tempests and to prevent the hut from being suddenly invaded and shut in by the snow.

Afterwards, they took an inventory of what they possessed. Their property, besides a large quantity of skins and furs variously fashioned, consisted of the following objects: an iron plate with four feet for the hearth, an iron tripod, a boiler and a kettle, some spoons, knives and forks, a lantern, a saw, two hatchets, two hunting-knives, pistols and guns with a hundred cartridges for each gun, a thermometer and the tiny compass belonging to the charms of Yegor's watch-chain—the watch was to play the important role of chronometer.

Unfortunately, the supply of food, as the reader already knows, was not large.

From the first day, the chief of police refused the food that was offered to him. A kettle had been placed upon the fire in order to make soup from reindeer meat. The meat set aside, each one, except Yermac, dipped a spoon into the kettle. Yermac drew from his sack some rye biscuits he had furnished himself with at the ostrog; these, with a morsel of youkoula of mouksoune (a sort of sea gudgeon dried,) constituted his supper.

Yegor and M. Lafleur looked at each other, painfully impressed by the chief of police's determination.

"And when you have eaten your biscuit, what then?" asked the Parisian.

"To-morrow, I shall begin hunting," responded Yermac.

"To hunt one must have a gun!"

"And you have mine! No matter! I will set traps. You will trust me with a hatchet to prepare my traps, will you not?"

"Certainly," said Yegor, who admired the character of the chief of police.

"But you will be compelled to have bait," observed the Parisian.

"Right; I did not think of that," answered Yermac, and ceasing to eat, he put aside his morsel of youkoula.

He refused the tea prepared with melted snow, and, after his more than primitive repast eaten amid biting cold, stretched himself out dressed as he was upon the planks of the camp bed, having previously changed his stockings, a precaution without which one would expose himself to the risk of freezing his feet.

The next day, he set ten traps, formed of roughly constructed boxes embedded in the snow. In each box he placed the bait. Above, a heavy flat piece of wood, held in position by a spring, was designed to fall upon the animal—which, in touching the bait, would free the spring—and retain it until the arrival of Yermac.

Twenty-four hours afterwards, the chief of police, his hatchet in his hand, visited his traps, one by one, but found nothing in them. Returning towards the hut, with the prospect of a fast before him, he saw some makarcha plants and with difficulty pulled them to eat the roots.

They formed his breakfast, dinner and supper that day.

Yegor begged Nadege, who was affected by Yermac's stoical resolution, not to pay too much attention to him; that was, perhaps, the only way to induce him to act otherwise.

Very early in the morning everybody was astir. They rekindled the fire which, little by little, had gone out; then they washed their faces and hands with snow recently fallen and yet soft. This operation finished, the kettle was placed on the fire and tea made. Afterwards, it was necessary to see what could be done about dinner and, ultimately, the evening meal with the very limited means as to provisions and utensils at their disposal. Yermac always did by himself what he called his cooking.

The cold grew bitter, and the hut was far from being comfortable when the north-west wind, blowing with violence, drove back the smoke into the interior.

The Yakoutes' pipes had frozen. Iron burned on touching it when one forgot to envelop his hand in a glove or piece of skin. The excessive cold, which at first acted as a stimulant to the will, speedily produced debility. M. Lafleur was the initial sufferer. A sort of intoxication took possession of him, his jaws trembled and his movements became uncertain. Sometimes, in the night, he felt the cold so much that, despite his polisse and the fire burning in the centre of the hut, he arose repeatedly, went out-of-doors, and ran around the cabin to give some pliancy to his benumbed limbs.

The night of thirty-six days had commenced on the 22nd of November. Yermac thought seriously of taking advantage of the darkness to escape; but he could only attempt to gain Nijni-Kolimsk with the aid of one of the guides.

Tekel seemed to him to be too thoroughly devoted to his masters to be influenced, but Chort offered more encouragement. The chief of police frightened him by telling him what kind of people he was serving and to what he was exposing himself, should they be arrested in their attempt to escape. Finally, he proposed that he should flee with him in the narta, the dogs of which were accustomed to obey him, promising him a handsome recompense as soon as they reached the settlements of the Kolima.

The Yakoute asked time for reflection. He was, doubtless, on the point of yielding to the pressing applications of the chief of police, when Yegor, without suspecting Yermac's plans, totally overthrew him.

Yegor had quickly comprehended that they could not feed thirty-four dogs until the close of the winter. Many things, also, were wanted to assure the success of his bold project. He decided, in accord with M. Lafleur, to send the two Yakoutes in their nartas to Elope-Balo or some of the villages on the banks of the Omolon—Nijni-Kolimsk would be too dangerous—there to purchase reindeer skins in sufficient quantity to make an ourouse, or traveling tent, to be used on the resumption of the journey, pieces of birch wood and skins for the construction of a baydare, a very light, flat boat made of wood and leather, for crossing streams, and whale ribs to strengthen the runners of the sledges when the ice was rough and also in those places where the snow was impregnated with salt. Finally, the guides were to collect a considerable supply of frozen reindeer ribs and dried fish for the dogs. Yegor gave Tekel some gold pieces and rouble notes, which are perfectly current with the natives, although their money, for the most part, is either tobacco or brandy.

The two Yakoutes were to depart in forty-eight hours, and Yermac had but a very faint hope of deciding Chort to disappear before the moment when he was to follow his comrade Tekel.

CHAPTER XXIV.—LADISLAS' RETURN AND DIMITRI'S DEATH.

The next night the dogs barked so loudly the Yakoutes persuaded the fugitives that Tchouktchis must be in the vicinity. Yegor and M. Lafleur watched with loaded weapons within reach. At last, Yegor grew impatient and went into the open air.

Afar off he heard a strange noise. What could this noise mean?

Suddenly, a vague, white light spread over the sky, like a milky way which had overflowed its limits. Surrounding objects took shape and became visible, as if in splendid moonlight. The ice-fields sparkled in the distance like fused silver.

Soon, however, a blaze of fire broke forth at the horizon, constantly increasing and shooting out sheaves of flame, fuses and long fiery swords which seemed to pierce the sky and make it run with blood. Drops of red light fell like drops of gore; and as nothing is more shifting, more changeable, than the phenomenon of the aurora borealis, green tints speedily succeeded the red hues. One might have thought that an immense Bengal light was illuminating the horizon. Then it was like a rainbow which had formed itself in the middle of the night, a rainbow resembling a marvelous mosaic of jewels, diamonds, rubies, amethysts, sapphires, and topaz stones.

By the brightness of these shifting and capricious displays of light which filled the sky, Yegor perceived a sledge drawn by several pairs of reindeer which was making its way over the sea, quite level at that point, in the direction of the hut, keeping at a distance of about a hundred yards from the coast. He immediately thought that they were pursued, and called the Parisian to impart to him his fears. The latter, after having put on his forehead, nose and ears all the pieces of fur he could gather, finally quitted the hut.

He thought, on seeing the flaming sky, that his friend had summoned him without to enjoy this spectacle yet new to both of them, and uttered an exclamation.

"Hush!" said Yegor. "and glance at those people who are advancing towards us in a narta."

The howling of the dogs had, at first, prevented M. Lafleur from hearing the scraping of the narta's runners upon the frozen sea. He looked a moment in the direction indicated by Yegor.

"In any case," said he, "they are not numerous—two or three at most. If they have business with us, they may find people who can hold their own with them. But listen!"

The narta was near enough for them to hear words exchanged between its occupants. Upon frozen surfaces sounds may be distinctly heard a great distance.

"I know that voice!" cried M. Lafleur.

"And I also!" said Yegor, growing pale.

"May I never again see the Place de la Bastille if it is not the voice of Ladislas!"

"Your speak truly, Monsieur Lafleur! Look! the narta is shaping its course by the bark of our dogs."

Two minutes afterwards, the little Pole was in the arms of Yegor and M. Lafleur. All three wept with joy at meeting again. The narta remained with its driver upon the surface of the frozen sea.

"With whom are you, my dear child!" asked Yegor, at last.

"With the son of the chief of police of Yakoutsk, who has brought me back to you all."

"The son of the chief of police!" cried M. Lafleur, in whose ears this title had a disagreeable sound.

"He is very ill—wounded. Thanks to the money he possessed, he was able to induce a rich Tunguse having very handsome reindeer to bring us hither."

"Yegor, I am going to him," said M. Lafleur, "while you conduct Ladislas to his sister. But, be careful! Prepare her a little for the joy which awaits her."

M. Lafleur cautiously descended towards the narta. The sky had much paled. When he was near the travelers:

"Come on," said he; "we are your friends."

"And my father," asked Dimitri, in a feeble voice.

"He is over there, with us. More than once he has spoken of you, and your fate torments him."

"Then I shall see him—before I die!" murmured the wounded man.

"Before you die! Ah! I see—you are ill, my friend, very ill; but we will care for you. Come quickly and warm yourself at our fire, and tell your driver to do the same."

The Tunguse, thus invited, lifted Dimitri and, with the aid of the Parisian, Yermac's son succeeded in clearing the distance which separated the sledge from the hut. His father ran to meet him.

"Father!" said the young man, on perceiving him. "give me credit for a good action. I have brought you back the child."

Yermac clasped Dimitri to his breast; but he could not avoid making the following observation to him:

"For your first good action, you have not exactly had a happy hand."

"How is that:"

"The child is the son of exiles—he is in company with others who are escaping."

"I did not know it," murmured Dimitri.

"The merit of the action is yours, all the same," said Yermac. "The moment I return this child to them, I shall feel myself completely free from every obligation in regard to them. And I shall owe this very great satisfaction to you."

Dimitri could not and did not understand. His father saw how weak he was and asked him the reason.

Dimitri answered:

"It happened when I wished to quit my companions. I was already far from them, bringing the child, in the night, when they fired upon us. They comprehended that I had abandoned them. I was hit by a ball below the left shoulder. I could not stop to care for myself—and that is the reason I am in this sad state."

"Unfortunate man! You exposed yourself to an aggravation of your condition!" cried Yermac.

"Then you no longer wish to see me die, father!" said the young man, with a sad smile. "At least, I have seen you again before drawing my final breath," added he, "and you will, perhaps, pardon me for all the pain I have caused you!"

"Ah! Dimitri!" cried Yermac, greatly moved, "do not talk thus. At this moment, many things are forgotten. But how were you able to get here—to push your search so far!"

"The courage of the child did everything. As for me, I felt that I was dying and did not wish to lose an hour, in order to redeem myself in your eyes, to turn from me your malediction."

What an affecting scene was this reconciliation of father and son in this vast frame, lighted up by the last phase of the aurora borealis, in which now the glare of a huge conflagration was mingled with the soft shades of early dawn!

That night was finished in the hut amid the chat of Ladislas and the happy Nadege and the confidential talk of Dimitri and his father. The Yakoutes feted the Tunguse.

At length, Yermac said to Yegor:

"Thanks to my son, I am able to restore you this child whom we all believed lost, and who, certainly, would have died of want without Dimitri. Do you not think, Semenoff, that this is something?"

Opera House Jingle.

Much credit is due the Edison Electric Illuminating Company of this place for the complete and perfect way in which they have lighted the new opera house. It is undoubtedly one of the most successful jobs of electric lighting to be found in any building.

If Mr. Garman would grade and put down a pavement on the opposite side of the street from the court house yard gate up to opposite the opera house entrance and then put down a patent pavement crossing he would find it would pay him in the end. Many persons, and especially ladies—and more especially if they are not accompanied by a gentleman—do not like passing through or in front of so large a crowd as will always be congregated on the pavement or the hotel porch. The writer was impelled to make the above suggestion because of the numerous remarks made about the crowd on Thursday and Friday night.

Would it not be a good thing to open a small opera house ice cream and soda water parlor in the room in front of the ticket office of the new opera house. It is very long to sit for three hours or more, and especially in warm weather, without a drink of any kind, and if a parlor, as above suggested, was opened up there it would undoubtedly be well patronized. Between acts the young gentlemen could treat their lady friends to an ice cream, soda water or milk shake, as they might prefer; the enterprise would be appreciated by both parties and would undoubtedly prove a financial success to the owner. If Mr. Garman does not feel like doing so let some one else step in and secure the privilege.

Ask Your Friends About It.

Your distressing cough can be cured. We know it because Kemp's Balsam within the past few years has cured so many coughs and colds in this community. Its remarkable sale has been won entirely by its genuine merit. Ask some friend who has used it what he thinks of Kemp's Balsam. Large bottles 50cts and $1 at all druggist.

A Very Mean Trick.

Girls are rather very scarce out in Philipsburg or else they have some very mean and jealous young men as the following from the Journal of that place will plainly show.

Information comes to us that one of the meanest tricks that ever happened near this city was committed last night in Chester Hill by a number of young bloods. It appears that a certain young man went to see his best girl in that place. A number of young men feeling very jealous for the smiles the young lady bestows upon this young man appointed a committee to see what could be done in the case. The committee reported that the only thing they knew to do in the case was to take him away from her. The gang to the number of six deliberately walked up to the porch where the young man and the charming young lady were seated, picked him up carried him over to the creek where they extorted the promise that he would give each one of the gang a show during the week he reserving Sunday night for himself. To say the young man is very much put out over the affair is putting it very mild. Shame on the villains.

Very Fastidious.

Down in Lock Haven there is a telephone in the house of a gentleman whose wife is fastidiously refined. She frequently has occasion to use the instrument, but as might be expected, even a telephonic association with low and unrefined people deeply harrows the good lady's soul. She declares that she frequently detects the odor of liquor and tobacco when doing her marketing or communicating with the livery stable over the telephone. Her last move is probably unique in the history of the telephone. The other morning she drove to her butcher's and told that individual that whenever he or his assistants spoke to her through the telephone they must wash their hands and put on a coat. "It is highly indelicate," she said, "for you to speak to a lady with unclean hands and in your shirt sleeves, and unless you cease doing so I shall have to trade with the other butcher person." That lady ought to live under a glass case, on some lonely mountain peak, far away from mankind. This work a day world is not the place for her.

Another Sharper.

Towns through the state should keep a lookout for a sharper giving his name as Jos. Decker and representing himself as advance agent of Sells Bros. & S. H. Barrett's United Circus. He is tall, weighs about 180 pounds, and wears dark checkered suit. He gave Tyrone a visit a week or so ago and made extensive "preparations" for the appearance of his show. Among the things, he had a forged check cashed by a Tyrone man who is now ten dollars out by the operation, and fleeced other business men in town. His real name is Al. Leslie.

Demorest's Family Magazine.

The ideal magazine should be like a perfect dinner: seasonable, tempting satisfying, never heavy, each course perfect in itself, with dainty entrees entremets to give zest and piquancy, the whole affording such pleasure and satisfaction that it leaves a desire for a repetition of the feast. This is the case with Demorest's Family Magazine for October, just received; when one has read it all through (and everyone who takes it up will do so) there is a desire to begin at the beginning and enjoy it all over again.

The October number takes us visiting again, this time to the palatial residence of Senator Hearst of California; and when one has looked through the magnificent illustrations, one feels quite at home "upstairs and downstairs and in my lady's chamber." The young folks will all be interested in "The Game of Golf for Ladies," which is quite new on this side of the water; and old and young will read with interest and profit the curious facts about animals embodied in "Disguises in Animal Life," and soft-shell crabs will be invested with a new interest after one has read about "The First Armor-Wearers." In fact, every page is as good as it can be, Demorest's Family Magazine is the ideal Magazine.

But this month there is a special attraction: the new List of Club Premiums. Not only is there a host of handsome as well as useful articles offered, including material for an elegant silk dress, but the more than liberal offer is made that if this generous list does not include the thing or things desired, the prospective getter-up of a club may write to the publisher stating what would be liked better, and special terms will be made for the coveted article. The offer is unprecedented, anything from a paper of needles to the complete furniture of a house being obtainable without paying out a cent!

The Remark Sarcastic.

There were eighteen of us in the sleeping-car, all on our way to the seashore, and I took notice that every single person in the car had on buff shoes, says a writer in the Detroit Free Press. I noticed it, because I saw the porter look at each person's feet as he came aboard. It meant a good deal to him, and it was plain enough from his looks and actions that he was put out.

The last berth had been made up, and the last passenger had disappeared behind the curtains, when the porter of the next car ahead came in and called to our porter in a loud voice;

"Hey you, Jim?"

"Ize heah."

"Ize got a gem'l an on my cah—a ar'al true gem'lan."

"Is dat possible?"

"Yes, sah, Ize got him for suah!"

"How does you know he's a true gem'lan?

Kase he's got on calfskin shoes and has axed me to black em?

And having jabbed the cold iron into our souls he retired to the rear car probably to make the same speech there.

Her Misplaced Confidence.

Maud, I should like to know the meaning of this reception.

Mr. Hazard, you shall, answered the proud country girl, freezingly. I have found you out, sir. That is all.

What do you mean dearest?

Don't come near me, sir! Stay on the other side of that table. I have found out that you have been amusing yourself at my expense.

For heaven's sake, Maud explain.

I know I am freckle faced, sir! she said, with flashing eye, but I did not think you capable of joking about it with your friends.

I haven't done anything of the kind, Maud! protested the young man.

You have, sir! After you had—had proposed to me last night, and I—I had said yes, and you had gone, I overheard you telling Mr. Bellcamber out there on the front porch what glorious fun it was to go into the mountains in August and catch speckled beauties.

I hear that your daughter was married to a man in Japan.

Yes, that's so.

Is he well off?

Not very.

And what is his name?

Smith.

Great Scott! The idea of a woman going all the way to Japan to marry a poor man by the name of Smith.

Colorado Mother—Here, you Sal! Wot 're doin'? Sally (aged 9)—Herdin' the baby.

Has your girl a keen sense of the ridiculous?

Yes, she laughs all the time I am with her.

THE NEWS CONFIRMED.

Particulars of Robert Ray Hamilton's Death Received in New York.

STORY OF HIS LAST HUNT.

There Are No Suspicions of Foul Play or of Suicide—Two Letters Have Reached the Dead Man's Father Telling of the Tragedy.

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—The uncertainty which surrounded the report of Robert Ray Hamilton's death by drowning in the Snake river, Idaho, has changed into a conviction that the ex-assemblyman has met his death.

Two letters have been received by Mr. Schuyler Hamilton, Jr., which give further details. One is from John D. Sargent, keeper of the ranch at which Ray Hamilton was staying, and the other is from Cassimir De R. Moore, of Sing Sing, who was on a hunting expedition in the vicinity of Sargent's ranch.

Full Details of the Sad Event.

Mr. Sargent's letter gives full details of the sad event, as far as he knew. He says that Saturday, Aug. 23, while at Kamtuck postoffice, Idaho, Mr. Hamilton was accidentally drowned in Snake river, six miles below the outlet of Mary mere. The day before he left the ranch alone—although Mrs. Sargent tried to persuade him not to go—for the lower end of the lake, via the Sheridan trail, on horseback, to hunt antelope.

He had to ford Snake river below the lake. He forded all right, going down Friday, staid at the south camp that night and started back Saturday night with an antelope head, skin and hams tied on his saddle, and went into the river after dark half a mile above the ford, in about the worst place he could have struck. It seems that his spurs tangled up in the grass in the bottom of the river. It really was the only place in the river where there is dead water.

The Body Found.

Mr. Sargent returned to the ranch on Wednesday night, Aug. 27, at 9 o'clock. Mrs. Sargent said, "Hamilton has not returned from his hunt," and Mr. Sargent immediately sent an official messenger to turn out the best mountaineers in the lower valley to search for him.

On Monday, Sept. 1, they found his horse with the saddle and the antelope antlers and hams tied on it. The horse's back was ruined by the saddle turning and the weight hanging so long by the cinches. On Tuesday morning at half past 9 o'clock they found his body. His watch had stopped at half past 9 o'clock Saturday night, Aug. 29. He was brought to Mary Mere in the boat, and buried close to the house on a spot overlooking Mary Mere and the Teton mountains.

Mr. Moore's Letter.

Following is the letter sent by Mr. Cassimir De R. Moore:

"LAKE MARY MERE, Sept. 5, 1890.

"DEAR SCHUYLER—Gillie and I have just arrived here at the lake and met Mr. Sargent, who was on his way out to mail the letter telling you of poor Ray's sad death. You can just imagine that we feel dreadfully and have no desire to continue our hunting expedition. But Sargent wants us to come to the house, up the lake twelve miles, and see Ray's grave.

"If you will allow me a word of advice I should recommend you not to attempt to have Ray's body removed now. It could not be done. If you write to Mr. Sargent he will choose the best time for removing the body and notify you. But this I say, knowing that Ray had expressed a wish to be buried here, I have tried to let you have such information as may be of use to you, and have kept the man waiting until I write. Will you please send word to them at home?"

Little Room for Hope.

Gen. Schuyler Hamilton, father of the drowned man, was seen by a reporter at the Windsor hotel. The old gentleman, who has been mentally tortured by alternate hopes and fears since the first rumor of his son's death reached him on Saturday night, seemed more resigned to the blow now that he knew the worst.

"There is little room for hope now," he said sadly; "the two letters received by my son Schuyler end all uncertainty as to the truth or falsity of my son's death. I have no doubt that he is dead, and that he died in the manner indicated by Mr. Sargent's letter. There is nothing in the details so far received that would justify a suspicion of foul play.

"Mr. Sargent was well recommended to my son by Mr. Wendell Goodwin and other friends, and I see no object that any one out there could have in bringing about my son's death. Neither do I think he committed suicide. My son was too brave to take his own life, and had plenty of courage to live down the cloud which temporarily overshadowed his career."

Further Particulars to Be Sought.

Gen. Hamilton stated that further information must be obtained from Mr. Charles A. Peabody, who has consented to take charge of the matter and make whatever arrangements may be necessary to obtain further particulars of Ray Hamilton's death, or to have the body brought east for interment, in case the family so desire.

No steps will be taken for some time toward a continuance of the suit for the annulment of the alleged fraudulent marriage between Mr. Hamilton and Eva Mann.

A Mysterious Shooting.

CLINTON, Ia., Sept. 17.—A stranger in Grand Mound asked where the residence of Mr. Langdon, a contractor for the Chicago and Northwestern, was. He was directed to the house, and at the door asked for Mrs. Langdon, whom he shot and killed as she came toward him. Mr. Langdon immediately shot the stranger, inflicting fatal wounds. Further particulars have not been obtainable so far, as Mr. Langdon says he does not know who the man is. Mr. Langdon came here recently from St. Paul to take charge of laying a double track for the Northwestern road.

BOSTON, Sept. 17.—The Ancient and Honorable Company of Artillery have decided to celebrate their fall field day in Philadelphia.

A DRAW AFTER ELEVEN ROUNDS

Charges of Crookedness in the Warren-Van Heest Fight.

BUFFALO, Sept. 17.—The fight between Tommy Warren and John Van Heest for $500 a side came off at about midnight in the vicinity of the state line between New York and Pennsylvania. It resulted in a draw after eleven rounds had been fought, though the fight was fairly won by Van Heest. Charges were made that the affair was "fixed" for Warren to lose in order that money could be made by his friends in betting against him. The fight, however, was a game and hot one up to the time it was called. Warren was seconded by Hite Peckham, of Buffalo, and Frank Rogan, of Bradford, and Van Heest was looked after by Tom Minning, of San Francisco, and Tom Clark, of Philadelphia. Jack Burns, of Bradford, was the referee. Warren weighed about 119 pounds and Van Heest 122.

It was exactly 12:45 o'clock when time was called. Warren was the first to lead, and landed a right hander on his opponent's jaw, and a moment later got in another one. The round closed with a hot exchange, in which Warren got in a left hander.

In the second round considerable rushing was done without much effect.

In the third Warren got in a soaker on the jaw with his left hand, and another on the forehead. A clinch followed and Warren's seconds claimed a foul, but it was not allowed. After the men got together again Van Heest landed a right hander on Warren's ear. The round closed in Van's favor. In the fourth Warren's left landed twice in succession on Van's head. The latter rushed and Warren got some heavy blows, a right hander above the eye sending Tommy over the ropes.

In the fifth Warren's right landed on Van's wind. The exchange of blows was about evenly divided.

In the sixth Van got in again on Warren's head, a moment later on his wind, and then once on his head. Hot exchanges followed, and each man landed several times.

In the seventh Warren appeared to be tiring, and Van rushed him around the ring, landing again and again. Warren was badly winded, but managed to hold out until the round closed.

In the eighth Van seemed to be getting his second wind, while Warren's blows lacked force. He hit Van three times on the jaw, but did not hurt much. Van used his right savagely.

In the ninth Warren's left again found Van's jaw. Then Van's right got in its work. Some in-fighting occurred, and another foul was claimed, but not allowed.

In the tenth Warren freshened somewhat, and his left rested on Van's jaw in rapid succession. Van landed twice in the wind. A clinch followed and a claim of foul, which, like the others, did not go.

In the eleventh Van's left handed drive at Warren's ear caught Tommy. An uppercut with the left was then scored by each. Van landed a telling right hand blow on Warren's left eye which brought first blood. In the clinch that followed the men fell and Warren hung to Van's neck, the latter trying to get away, but unable to rise.

When time for the next round was called Warren, with his seconds, claimed a foul. A dispute followed and a general confusion ensued.

Van wanted to fight, but Warren didn't and pulled off his gloves, though he claimed afterward the referee ordered him to do so.

The referee then called the contest a draw amid the groans, hisses and protests of the spectators.

Warren was very groggy, and another round would probably have finished him. Van Heest did not show a mark, and his seconds pronounced it robbery to take the fight away from him. The fight lasted fifty minutes.

They Say the Time Is Too Short.

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—A meeting of the chamber of commerce was held at 1 o'clock to protest against the immediate enforcement of the new tariff law. About fifty members were present. Alexander E. Orr presided in the absence of President Smith. Resolutions were adopted setting forth that the time allowed by the McKinley bill for the removing of goods now in bond was too short; that the money necessary for such removal would add to the present stringency, and asking that the time for removing the goods be extended to Feb. 1, 1891. Among those present were C. N. Bliss, Erastus Wiman, Col. Shepard and J. M. Constable.

Mr. Breckinridge Renominated.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 17.—W. C. P. Breckinridge has been renominated for congress at Lexington, Ky., by the Democrats of the Ashland district. There was no opposition. The Republicans will probably make no nomination.

HELENA, Mont., Sept. 17.—Judge A. A. Dixon has been renominated for congress by the Democratic state convention.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Sept. 17.—N. J. Curtis, of San Bernardino, has been nominated by the Democrats of the sixth congressional district in convention at Coronada.

Defaulter Tate Located.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Sept. 17.—Dick Tate, Kentucky's fugitive treasurer, has been seen again. J. McBey, of Springfield, Mo., has written here for a requisition, declaring positively that he has spotted the man. He had so much confidence in his judgment that he inclosed the necessary fee for the requisition. McBey says he has certainly located Tate in Dallas county, Mo., the county just to the north of and adjoining the county of Green, of which Springfield is the county seat.

Old Time Telegraphers Elect Officers.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 17.—At the convention of Old Time telegraphers the officers of the association were re-elected as follows: President, W. A. Plum, of Chicago; vice president, W. B. Wilson, of Harrisburg, Pa.; secretary and treasurer, J. E. Pettit, of Chicago. Washington, D. C., was decided on as the place for holding the next annual meeting.

Bobby—Pa, are you very busy to-night.

Father—Well I'm just reading the paper, Bobby. What is it?

There's a race of little people called Pigmies, isn't there?

Yes.

Well, pa, when they grow up are they Hogmies?

Bobby, you can go to bed at once.

How It Was!

At the battle of Gettysburg I was shot through the left leg and was sent to the hospital. The army surgeons relieved me but pronounced my case incurable. It discharged pieces of bone, and for years I have suffered with a running sore. I tried everything which my limited means would allow, and experienced no relief until I tried Sulphur Bitters. I am now almost well and shall continue their use. —Old Soldier.

You are a member of the debating club, aren't you.

Yes.

Well, perhaps you can settle this matter for me. What are the relative values of the Jack rose, the shad roes, the moonlight rows and the bald-headed rows?

WASHINGTON NEWS.

Congressmen Discuss the Kennedy Speech. Business in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—The house in the morning proceeded to the consideration of the Enloe resolution relative to the Kennedy speech. The pending question was on the point of order raised against the resolution by Mr. Grosvenor, of Ohio.

Mr. Blount, of Georgia, in arguing the point of order recalled the Brooks-Sumner episode and cited the action of the house in that case. The gentleman from Ohio (Kennedy) had been so indignant at the action of a certain senator that he proceeded to denounce him in vigorous language. The senator had been denounced as a felon and as a traitor. He had been charged with colleaguing with another senator to betray an obligation he owed to the country.

Whenever a member of this body arraigned a senator as a felon and a traitor by reason of his conduct in regard to legislation, there could be no question but that the character of the house was assailed. If there were any question about it here the public interest manifested throughout the country showed the public conception of the attitude of the gentleman from Ohio and the duty of the house. Mr. Blount was not here to vindicate the character of the senator from Pennsylvania. He was not here to investigate whether the charges made by the gentleman from Ohio were true or not.

These were matters with which no member had anything to do; but the question of the character and dignity of the house was one with which members had something to do and for which the people would hold them to a rigid responsibility.

The senate met at 11 a. m. with Vice President Morton in the chair.

Mr. Hiscock introduced a bill to authorize the construction of a tunnel connecting Staten Island with Long Island, N. Y., the same as the bill introduced in the house yesterday by Mr. Covert, of New York.

The senate then proceeded to consider for an hour bills on the calendar unobjected to, the first bill being senate bill authorizing the librarian of congress to purchase at not exceeding $30,000 "Townsend's Library of National, State and Individual Records," concerning the origin, progress and consequences of the late civil war; passed after considerable debate.

House bill for marking the lines of battle and the positions of the Army of Northern Virginia at Gettysburg, Pa., was passed. Also senate bill appropriating $75,000 for a public building at Bar Harbor, Me.

The conference report on the railroad land forfeiture bill was agreed to—yeas, 30; nays, 13, the Democrats voting in the negative and the Republicans in the affirmative.

The house anti-lottery bill was then taken up, read and passed.

Gems from Ingalls' Speech.

Let all persons who believe in a division of all wealth or in a Nationalistic government read the following extracts from the speech of John J. Ingalls, made at Pittsburg last Saturday night:

DIVISION OF WEALTH.

Rich as we are, fellow citizens, if the entire amount were divided up every man, woman and child in this country would have about $875.30, and I have this to say that if the Democratic theory is right that every man is entitled to an equal pro rata share of the entire assets of the country, somebody has got a portion of mine to night. (Immense applause.] And if anybody can point out to me any statute, any writ, any process at law by which I can overtake and detect the guilty party and compel him to disgorge he shall have my cordial and hearty support. Mr. Jay Gould and I started out in life about the same time. He had a patent mouse trap and I the sheeepskin of a lawyer, He set his trap in Wall street and came very near taking the earth with it; and I want to say to you with entire confidence, to go no farther, that the only reason why I have not got as much money as Jay Gould has got is because I didn't know how to get it. [Laughter and great cheers.] I have examined the Revised Statutes and all the sessions laws and every statute that has been enacted since my majority was attained, and I have failed to discover any legislation that prevented me from acquiring $100,000,000. (Laughter.)

WHAT WOULD SURELY HAPPEN.

I have sometimes wandered wha would come to pass if some great equitable statute of justice and equity for redistribution could be enacted so that upon a given date, say the 1st of July following, every citizen of the United States should have his $875.30. I have a shrewd suspicion that within six months from that time we would find very much the same condition of things as now. [Laughter.] Some men would be riding in Pullman cars and some would be walking along by the side of the track [laughter] with their entire earthly possessions in a bandana trunk with a pin lock [laughter] looking for a dry culvert for a bed-room. [Laughter.] And some men would be in Congress and some would be in the penitentiary. [Laughter.] And some would be sitting down in fence corners waiting to see the procession pass by, and over all, loud and clear, would be heard the voice of the leather-lunged Democratic demagogue [immense applause] who gets his living by the perspiration of his jaw [laughter] rather than by the sweat of his brow [laughter] denouncing the wrongs of labor again [prolonged cheers.]

A Permanent Cure.

For years I was troubled with the most malignant type of Chronic Blood Trouble. After trying various other remedies, without getting any benefit, I was induced by Joe Schell, a barbar, who has since moved to St. Louis, and who was cured by Swift's Specific of a Constitutional Blood Trouble, to take S S S. A few bottles cured me permanently. I also consider S S S the best tonic I ever saw. While taking it my weight increased and my health improved in every way. I have recommended S S S to several friends, and in every case they were satisfied with the results.

Best Nourishment for Consumptives.

Consumptive persons are said to be greatly benefitted by the use of Speer's Port Grape Wine, both Fermented and Unfermented. It seems to give nourishment when everything else fails. The rich properties of the wine derived from the iron in the soil on which the grapes grow makes new blood and if it does not cure, we believe it prolongs life in many cases of consumption. In fact, cases have been reported of perfect cures being effected by the use of Speer's Port Wine.

Consumption Surely Cured.

TO THE EDITOR:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above-named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

Chained Twenty Years in a Cellar.

George Dietrick, an unfortunate maniac has for twenty years been chained in the cellar of his father's house near Mt. Carmel. A narrow flight of stairs leads to the cellar, which is a room eight feet square with two small windows. The floor is covered with oil cloth, and at the farther side of the room is a wooden couch. The maniac is about forty years old and is a splendid specimen of humanity physically, with muscular limbs, dark hair, small lustreless eyes, and his weight is about 160 pounds. Around his left ankle a heavy chain six feet long is looped, the other end being fastened firmly to the floor under his couch. He mutters incoherently, and his brothers say he is never rational and is vicious at times, throwing things at his mother and father if they go too near him. The brothers control him by main force and declare that he shall not be removed without serious trouble, as he was shamefully abused at the Harrisburg Almshouse.

A brother told the following strange story of George's insanity. "Twenty years ago George was as sane as any body. Then he became infatuated with a girl who lived close by. For five months they were very intimate. She had a strange power over him. Suddenly he showed signs of insanity. We consulted good physicians from this and other towns, who all said he had a strong poisonous drug. George grew worse and all his affection turned to implacable hate. He declared he would kill her for making him insane. We were afraid he would hurt somebody, for his temper is bad, and we put him in the cellar in chains. In all his ravings there is always a woman, and we always believe he became insane through some unfair means."

—There was to have been a meeting of the World's Fair committee on Monday at which time it was rumored the election of a Director might take place. At this writing we have not heard the result. Quite a number of Gen. Hastings' friends were there to work up his boom chief among whom from Pennsylvania was the redheaded and hopeful Collector Thomas A. Cooper.

Put on the Brakes.

If you find you are going down hill in point of health. Failing strength, impaired digestion and assimilation are the marks of decline. Check these and other indications of premature decay with the grand vitalizer and restraining tonic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Beginning at the fountain head, the stomach, the Bitters remedies its inefficiency, corrects its errors, and sets it vigorously at work. The digestive organ is thus enabled to thoroughly separate from the food its nutritive principles, which the blood assimilating, is enriched. Thus is the system nourished, and being nourished, strengthened, and abnormal waste of its tissues stayed. Appetite, the power to rest well, a regular habit are also reestablished, and the various functions move once more in their natural and healthful groove. The Bitters, moreover, is a specific cure for and preventive of malarial complaints, rheumatism, billiousness and kidney troubles. tf.

The other is a three year-old bay colt with front feet shod.

Arrested!

Charles A Daley was arrested last evening for stealing from the drug store of Shiefman, a bottle of Sulphur Bitters. Before the court this morning, upon being asked why he should steal, he stated that his mother was troubled with Rheumatism, and that it was the only medicine that helped her, and being out of money and work was the cause of his stealing. As this was his first offence he was put on probation.—Newark News.

A Big Day's Work.

Pennsylvania Railroad engine No 1393, though its number starts with the figures supposed to bring misfortune is just now doing more for a day's work than any other piece of locomotive machinery in this neighborhood. It makes two round trips a day between Pittsburg and Altoona, or 468 miles, six days of the week. On what passes as its Sunday off, it takes an exercise spurt of 234 miles or one round trip. Its weekly mileage is 3,042 miles, which is to say, that it runs the equivalent of the circumference of the earth every two months. Its actual running time is 10 hours and 50 minutes out of every 24 at the rate of ebout 30 miles an hour.

A wild sweet potato found growing near Paulsboro, N J, measured 20 inches in circumference and weighed 12½ pounds, it is said.

The Government telegraph service of Great Britian transmits, it is said, on the average, 1,538,270 words a day to newspapers alone.

Narrow Escape.

The Renovo News says: "When Erie Mail east arrived at the damaged bridge above Cameron on Friday evening the train was stopped and the train hands got off to examine the bridge and were consulting one another as to whether it would be safe to cross or not. After several minutes consultation the crew had about concluded to cross. Returning to the train with that end in view, but alas! about the time they reached the train they heard a crash, and away went the bridge in the flood. Just imagine what a narrow escape from death and a watery grave that was. Had it held two minutes longer the whole train crew and passengers would have been swept away."

What steam is to the engine, Hood's Sarsaparilla is to the body, producing bodily power and furnishing mental force.

Peculiar

Many peculiar points make Hood's Sarsaparilla superior to all other medicines. Peculiar in combination, proportion, and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom. Peculiar in its strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One Hundred Doses One Dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's. Peculiar in its medicinal merits, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown, and has won for itself the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered." Peculiar in its "good name at home,"—there is now more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time, and retained its popularity and confidence among all classes of people so steadfastly.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Is Peculiar to Itself

Do not be induced to buy other preparations, but be sure to get the Peculiar Medicine,

100 Doses One Dollar

The Only One.

Again it affords us much pleasure to be able to record the fact that the Pittsburg Exposition opened its doors promptly as advertised. The many things to be seen are worthy of much of our space, but we will dwell only on one exhibit, the only one of its kind at the great show. Well may we say it is worthy of comment. We refer with pride to the display of Mr. Max Klein, the wholesale liquor merchant. There you will find a complete distillery in full operation. His Silver Age Rye stands on a pyramid high enough to overlook all other displays; the bbs, and cases show at once the extent of his trades, conveying the impression that he ships to all parts of the country. His Pennsylvania Rye Whiskies, his imported and domestic wines, brandies and cordials are prominent features. No other liquor house in the country would dare to compete with him in making a display, and no other house in his line can or will sell goods as pure and at such reasonable prices. You can leave orders at his stand or apply to him direct for his complete catalogue and price list. Such a house should receive the custom of all who wish fair treatment and to Max Klein 82, Federal St., Allegheny, Pa., we can recommend you.

—Charles Hollinsworth, an employee of the Centre Furnace Company, was arrested on Tuesday evening for carrying concealed weapons. He pulled a revolver while in the Brockerhoff House and flourishing it, told what he would do under certain circumstances. The police got wind of it and Charlie was taken in 'limbo" and the weapon, which was fully loaded was taken away. It is likely he will be committed for trial.

"Just as Good."

Say some dealers who try to sell a substitute preparation when a customer calls for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Do not allow any such false statements as this induce you to buy what you do not want. Remember that the only reason for making it is that a few cents more profit will be made on the substitute. Insist upon having the best medicine—Hoods Sarsaparilla. It is peculiar itself.

THE CITY OF TENTS.

How It Looks and What is Being Done at Grange Park.

From Monday' DAILY NEWS.

A visit to Grange Park, near Centre Hall, on Saturday afternoon revealed the fact that considerable work was being done to get everything in order for the opening of the picnic to-morrow. About 250 tents for families were already up and more are to be erected if needed. All have board floors. Boarding houses, exhibition tents, amusement tents and everything necessary to fit up a complete picnic ground was being done. A ticket office has already been put on the ground and to-day the railroad company will erect a large pavillion, or tent, for speaking purposes, etc.

A great number of exhibitions have already been shipped to the ground. The Geiser Manufacturing Company shipped one of their excellent Peerless traction engines and latest improved threshing machines which arrived on the grounds on Friday consigned to McCalmont & Co., Bellefonte's enterprising implement dealers, and which will be exhibited by them. The Walter A. Wood Manufacturing Company has a couple self-binders and several mowing machines in their exhibit on the ground. Numerous other exhibits of various kinds of farm implements and machinery were on the ground but they were not yet displayed so that it was impossible to tell whose they were.

A flying jenny is already put up and a live alligator, in a large box at the station, is evidently intended to form part of a side show. Two long rows of sheds have been put up in which to tie horses and teams. The water, such as it is, has been piped to the ground, and telephone and telegraph connection will be made to the grounds to day. This is the busiest day of all as all exhibitors are there getting their exhibition in proper shape By to morrow morning everything will be in apple pie order and then, if the rain keeps away, it will prove a successful picnic.

STORY OF A PURSE.

Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Two pretty young women, a Pittsburg business man; a parlor car and a purse.

It happened on a day train on the Pennsylvania road. The gentleman boarded it at a point near Altoona. At this station the observation car was attached. Upon leaving the Logan House dining-room he stepped aboard this car because it was the most convenient, and because he had not yet been assigned to a chair in the parlor car. The train started, and while engaged in scanning papers and meditating over business matters the Horse Shoe curve was reached. He looked out and over majestic scenery, and for the first time observed close by a sight just as fetching and equally as romantic, if not so majestic—two young women; strangers to him, he to them. Moved to a casual remark, he addressed one nearest him a commonplace observation concerning the passing panorama, and as his eyes rested upon the one to whom his words were directed, he noticed she was strikingly fair Great blue eyes, waves of golden hair; complexion wonderfully clear, with just enough tan to subdue the tone of cherry red lips and pearly teeth. Perhaps the remark would have been the same had his neighbor been an ogre. It was pleasant, the reply was, in the unmistakable language of a well-bred educated person. But the other; her companion! Her face clouded with disdain; her black eyes snapped; a rebuke emphasized by a menacing shake of her dark head! She was perhaps aged 25—some six years the senior of her friend. Catching this pantomime, he relapsed into meditation, turned to his papers, and after leaving Cresson, sought his chair in the car. He found it to be opposite those of his whilhom friends.

He remained busy; occasionally glanced at the beautiful picture opposite; and did she not return a friendly glance? The train reached Pittsburg, and while storing his papers in a bag, other passengers had left the car. He noticed a purse lying in the seat which had been occupied by the vision. It was partially open, and bulging from it were bills o the denomination of twenty and fifty.

He hurried to restore the lost purse. He overtook the owner at the sleeping car office in the act of purchasing tickets for the West. He approached, and with the utmost politeness addressed the fair est one, who, seeing hostilities were to to commence, steeled herself at a command of her companion.

'I crave pardon,' he said, 'I——'

'You are insolent,' with a stamp of her pretty foot, and in tones of anger and indignation; 'I shall call an officer.

By this time a clerical appearing person looked over his glasses with righteous disapproval; a gay drummer smiled audibly as he watched the trio, and scented defeat of the handsome man who still held his ground.

'You will nevertheless pardon me if I persist,' said he, earnestly, 'but (holding up the purse) I found this in the chair car, and I fancy you may need it before you reach the end of your journey, I trust its temporary loss has not inconvenienced you.'

He turned to depart. She blushed, then paled, and with utmost mortification on her countenance extended her hand.

"You will forgive my rudeness. I should not have made the mistake."

"It is unnecessary," pleasantly, "and I can't accept an apology under the circumstances.

"Oh, you must; you——." He was gone.

Noticing the direction he had taken, she followed him nearly to the entrance of the Union Station, and, clasping his arm, implored forgiveness.

"I have no rebuke to offer," said he. "You appear to have traveled, to have good judgment, to be well educated I trust these accomplishments, natural and acquired, will be used in the future to aid you in distinguishing true men and women when you meet them."

He turned away and was soon lost in the crowd.

Why He Got Out.

From the Detroit Free Press.

"Speaking of dreams," said a man in a Detroit tobacco store the other day, "I had one last night which has left a very strong impression behind."

"What was it?" asked two or three of the loungers in chorus.

"Well, I dreamed I was at a lonely railroad junction in the woods, waiting for a train. I was the only person there. All at once I discovered that I had lost my purse and ticket, and there I was, penniless and a stranger. I was wondering—"

At this point one of the loungers walked out doors, speedily followed by a second. As the latter overtook the first he asked:

"Ever hear the story before?"

"No."

"Then why didn't you stay?"

"Oh, I knew what was coming. He claims I owe him $10 on a transaction twenty years old. He was going to have me suddenly appear at that juncture and hand over the ten with compound interest to get him out of his fix, but he can't play no such roots on me. No, sir—I'm going to leave him to walk home on the ties."

Took Off Spot and Watch.

'I beg pardon for intruding upon your time,' said the polite, smiling man with the small valise in his hand, according to the Nashville American, 'A peddler is a nuisance, I know it as well as anybody. But there are various kinds of peddlers, and all of us must live. It isn't our fault that we are here. Those of us that earn our living honestly have to share the odium that belongs to the calling. I'm not complaining of this, gentlemen. It is a part o the curse that came in the original package to Adam. If there is any of you that has a spot of grease on coat, vest or pant—trousers,' he added, opening his valise and taking out a small cake of soap and a sponge. 'I shall be happy to remove it without charging a cent without asking anybody to buy my soap. It's my way of advertising. My dear sir, allow me. There is a spot on your vest.'

He rubbed the spot with a piece of soap, deftly applied the sponge, made a few passes over the cloth with a piece of cotton sheeting, and said:

'There, sir, that spot is gone. You will never see it again. And probably you will never see me, either, as I travel but once through a community. My goods will be found at the stores. I take it for granted nobody wishes to buy a cake of my soap. I wish you good morning, gentlemen.'

After the polite, smiling man had gone away the gentlemen whose garments had been operated upon had occasion to consult his watch.

It wasn't there.

It had disappeared with the spot.

The Homeliest Man on Record.

Jim Burr is the worst looking man in St. Louis, says the Kansas City star. His features are ugly, as features, and his ensemble is ugly. He is homely in detail, homely in the aggregate, and, worse than all, he knows it, and has a sad, sorrowful pride in being the champion ugly man.

The other day while Burr was absorbing his beer, which right has a religious savor with St. Louisians, there came into Tony Faust's a man from Carondelet who was so transcendently ugly as to almost stop traffic wherever he went.

Burr watched him for a time and it was evident from his looks that his pride had received a thrust. He had met a man who looked worse than he did, and his throne was threatened. At last, turning to Dick Johnson, he said.

Give us your honest opinion, Dick, am I as homely as that man.

Dick looked long and earnestly and delayed an answer as though hesitating to pain a friend. Finally he said.

No, Burr; that man lays over you. You are not in the class at all.

I was afraid so, said Burr, in musing sadness, still contemplating his conqueror. After a time he said, Dick, if I was a lion and that man should come into my age, do you know what I'd do?

No, said Dick, I don't.

I'd get out.

Sadie Martin was always a conundrum to me.

I suppose that's because you had to give her up.

The balloon had burst and they were coming down:

We're leading a rather fast life, I'm afraid, said the professor,

Fast? Why this isn't a comparison to New York, where I came from. Thus the ruling passion reigns even strong in death.

"To say that I am pleased with Mellin's Food is not to speak the entire truth. I am delighted with the way my little patients take it, and with the complete manner in which it fulfills indications as a food for invalids," writes a physician.

Oh, no, there ain't any favorites in this family! soliloquized Jenny; oh, no I guess there ain't. If I bite my finger I catch it over the knuckles. But the baby can eat his whole foot, and they think's it's just cunning!

Luck and Unlucky Colors.

Blue is a lucky color for daughters to wear, they say in the south of England while green is very unlucky.

Those dressed in blue
Have lovers true;
In green and white
Forsaken quite.

In the northeast of Scotland we have.

Blue
'S love true;
Green
'S love deen;
Yellow
'S forsaken.

In some portions of New England sixty years ago, the man who had just been jilted and was not inclined to mourn over it wore green to annoy the fair one who had jilted him.

Pianos - Organs.

The improved method of fastening strings of Pianos, invented by us, is one of the most important improvements ever made, making the instrument more richly musical in tone, more durable, and less liable to get out of tune.

Both the Mason & Hamlin Organs and Pianos excel chiefly in that which is the chief excellence in any musical instrument, quality of tone. Other things, though important, are much less so than this. An instrument with unmusical tones cannot be good. Illustrated catalogues of new styles, introduced this season, sent free.

They were on the piazza at Nankasket hotel. He was admiring her well shaped hand.

What a lovely shade of gloves you wear," said he, with a high tariff tone of affection in his voice.

Yes, I rather like it, Jack. It is new and chic—a combination of roses and mouse color.

Would you mind giving me one of them, Minnie. Of course I mean when you have got through with them and and have thrown them aside.

Why, Jack, you silly goose, Whatever can you want with one of my gloves when you will so soon have me. What do you want to do with it?

Have a smoking cap made out of it.

And then a silence three feet thick fell upon the pair. The silvery moon crept behind a cloud and set 'em up for the stars. A mad and insulted woman turned wrathfully away and another dream of love had been ruthlessly shattered.

"Naked and Ye Clothed Me."

We have met with a beautiful story, how a Russian soldier, one very cold, piercing night, kept duty between one sentry-box and another. A poor workingman, moved with pity, took off his coat and lent it to the poor soldier to keep him warm; adding, that he should soon reach home, while the soldier would be exposed out of doors for the night. The cold was so intense that the soldier was found dead in the morning. Some time afterwards the poor man was laid on his death-bed, and in a dream saw Jesus appear to him. 'You have got my coat on,' said the man. 'Yes, it is the coat you lent te me that cold night when I was on duty and you passed by. 'I was naked and you clothed me.'

OPENING OF THE HIGH SCHOOL.

A Fair Sized Crowd Assembled—Several Good Speeches.

At 2.30 o'clock on Wednesday a fair sized crowd had assembled in the High school room to witness the opening of the fall session of the High School. It was a little late—2.45 when the orchestra opened with a voluntary, after which there was an invocation by Rev. W. A. Houck.

W F Reeder, Esq., was then introduced. Mr. Reeder cited Mathuselah as being 969 years old and yet with all those years of study and time for observation and experience a man of the present day of the age of forty years knows more than that esteemed old patriarch of ancient time. He plainly portrayed the advantages of the student of the present day and urged upon all the necessity of taking advantage of all opportunities offesed. Study to win and make life a success. Let no effort of yours be spared to the elevation of yourselves higher and higher in the scale of manhood and womanhood.

Rev. Houck was then introduced. He said: When a mother comes to dress her child that is neither a baby or a boy it is the most difficult task of her life. The child is too big to wear dresses and too little to wear pants. That is the way with these members of the High school; they are neither the little fellows or the big fellows. As I walked up the street I noticed the many buildings being erected. I thought then what a noble work; but that work, though of brick and stone, will all pass away, but the work that you are here doing should be done so that it will make an impression that will never pass away. I often wondered why it was that the Saviour never wrotea letterbut I finally came to the conclusion that it must have been because he did not want to make an impression that would fade or pass away; he preferred making his impressions on the minds and hearts of men and women so that they were imperishable. And that is what you are doing professors, you are making impressions on the minds and hearts of the children that will never pass away. And that is what you are to do Student; fit yourselves to make impressions on men and women that will be imperishable. You are to be the future Senators, Governors, Presidents, principals of this school and merchants and business men. Hence, I say take advantage of the opportunities offered here and may God prosper and bless you.

Music by the orchestra.

Col. J. L. Spangler called on for an address; I am very glad we have not got any more Mathuselahs. If that old gentlemen had paid taxes, gas bills, grocery bills,and run around town 969 years huntinga pair of combination pants and frock I believe he would have been sorry he was 969 years old. The speaker drew a word picture of the educational advantages of years ago and contrasted them with those of the present day. Now what do you propose to do with all these advantages? Will you accept them as a matter of course and go through the entire schedule and come out finished and able to cope with the demands of the times or will you not? Now here's the whole question: If you give close attention to study and master your studies you will come out all right and able to cope with anything you may meet. You have no business with base ball until you know your studies; you have no use for company in the evenings—until you have your studies through; neither do you need to use chewing gum. And the boy who smoke cigarettes or cigars is not worth anything at all. Learn your studies thoroughly and then use any spare time you may have for proper amusement. If you don't do this you willcome out all right,too,but you won't be worth much anywhere you go and you'll be a nuisance at home. Many instances were cited of how prominent men got their education and it always proved to be the hard workers that got there.

D. F. Fortney, Esq. These exercises are held for a purpose; it is intended to attract your attention to what you are intended and expected to do. Mr. Fortney confined his remarks to a discussion of the proposed "prizes," and we must say they were very interesting. At the conclusion of Mr. Fortney's remarks the school was dismissed with the benediction by Rev. W. A. Houck.

The high school begins this school year under very auspicious circumstances. The corps of teachers are Prof. G. W. Johnstonbaugh, D. M. Wolf, and D. M. Lieb. The school is divided into four graded classe namely, "Advanced Class" and Class "A," "B" and "C."

PRIZES.

To incite to better scholarship and aid in advancing the standing of the High School, the following prizes are offered:

By the liberality of Wm. F. Reynolds three prizes are established to be known as the

WM. F. REYNOLDS PRIZES.

The End at Last Has Come.

Thus the announcement came of the death of Randolph P. Nightingale, on Monday last, formerly a clerk in the book store of H Y Stitzer, being at the time of his decease at Denver, Col. Like his father, he fell a victim to that dread disease, consumption. He was born December 10, 1860, at Rosemont, New Jersey. He came to Bellefonte at the age of 13 and remained with H Y Stitzer 15 years during which time he spent several winters in Florida. Being anxious to enter the Profession of his father, that of medicine, he attended part of a session or term at Jefferson University, Phila., but having while there, contracted Typhoid fever, he was obliged to aband on his private study, being advised after his illness that his system would not endure the necessary preparation and from that time the disease,to which his youthful life finally succumbed, made slow but sure inroads upon his system, from which he sought relief by travel, but all to no purpose, as the brief announcement from Denver sets forth.

Thus his life was sad and brief, and those who knew him best will remember that he suffered without murmuring. His remains will be brought from Denver to Doylestown, Pa., where his mother resides, and be laid away by kind friends, where he will await the coming of us all, freed from the ills and turmoil of life. To an experience like his, we think the fact is right when he says. "I would not live always,"

Davy Crockett.

On Friday night the Frank Mayo Company played "Davy Crockett" to a large audience in Garman's opera house. In this play Mr. Mayo appears at his best. He is a correct specimen of an original backwoodsman; he plays his part, from the time the curtain first rises until it drops at the close of the play, without a break, and at all times his demeanor is in entire keeping with the part he is playing: Miss Burress proves herself a very able support for Mr. Mayo and it goes without saying that should they ever visit Bellefonte again they will be warmly welcomed. The next performance in the opera house will be on September 24th when Louisa Arnot will be here.

Millheim Musings.

The citizens of Millheim had a very nice time to wait for their news or mail matter on last Tuesday evening. The mail was about two hours late and it was all on account of that railroad wreck at Axe Mann. [It was a fortunate thing that yon got any mail at al that day.—ED.]

Mr. A. A. Miller, the popular landlord of the National hotel, is very well liked judging from the way the guests stay at that place. Mr: Miller keeps a temperance house,

Dr: Frank and wife were off to Logantou, Clinton county, one day last week, for the purpose of visiting their many friends in that place.

—The Ada Richmond (formerly Louise Arnot) Ideal Burlesque Comedy Company, with a troupe of forty persons, including a brass band and orchestra, will be the next attraction at the Garman opera house. They will be here on Wednesday evening, September 24th. Watch for them.

OPENING OF THE NEW OPERA HOUSE.

A BRILLIANT AUDIENCE WITNESSED THE OPENING PERFORMANCE OF "NORDECK"—FRANK MAYO MADE A GREAT HIT—EVERYBODY WELL PLEASED.

It is needless to mention how impatient the amusement loving public were for the opening night of the new opera house. It formed the general theme of conversation for weeks, and especially ever since it was known that the wide famed actor, Mr. Frank Mayo, would be the opening attraction. The night came at last, and to commence at the beginning we will say that shortly after seven o'clock the Bellefonte band took up a position in front of the main entrance and for one half hour rendered some of their choicest selections drawing a la ge crowd around them.

It was eight o'clock when the house began to fill up rapidly andby ten minutes after a large and fashionable audience was assembled anxiously awaiting the rise of the curtain. In the meantime the orchestra had rendered a very fine overture and it was just twelve minutes after 8 o'clock when the handsome drop curtain slowly began to ascend and continued up, up until it was out of sight. Col. J. L. Spangler arrayed in full dress then came before the footlights and, after informing the audience that he was not Frank Mayo, proceeded to make a short speech commendatory of the enterprise of Mr. Garman for the erection of such a fine building. He complimented the artistic finish and congratulated the projector on his enterprise in building such a complete and convenient opera house and ended by saying that long after Mr. Garman had passed away his name would be handed down through future generations as being the name of a public benefactor.

It was just 8.20 when the curtain went up for the first act. The scene represented was on the "Lawn at the Castle Villica." The leading characters in the play were "Waldemar Nordeck," "Prince Leo," his half brother; "Witold Nordeck," Waldemar's uncle and guardian; "Fabian," Waldemar's tutor; "Count Morinski," Wanda's father; "Countess Wanda," "Princess Zuiliski," mother of Waldemar and Leo, and "Margaret," daughter of Witold. The hero and heroine were "Waldemar Nordeck" (Frank Mayo) and "Countess Wanda" (Miss Marie Burress) The play is founded on Warner's novel, "Vineta." It would take too long to give a complete resume of the play but the acts were as follows:

Act 1.—Lawn at Castle Villica. "The Satyr."

Act 2.—Great hall at Castle Villica. "The legend of Vineta."

Act 3.—Great hall at Castle Villica. "The moonlight hunt."

Act 4.—Great hall at Castle Villica. "Battle of bloods."

Act 5.—Great hall at Castle Villica. "Beginning of the End."

Time of Action—100 years ago. Locality—Prussia—Poland on the Baltic.

It has been truly said that Nordeck is one of the best Melodramatic plays ever rendered; and when rendered by actors and actresses suchas filled the stage ofthe opera house last night there is not the least danger of its superior being produced. Mr. Mayo is the ideal actor. So large and manly in appearance he at once inspires the audience with confidence in his behalf. So full and clear in his pronounciation the words that fall from his lips are not the meaningless words of most actors but convey the full power of all the passion or senitment they may embody.

Miss Burress, the heroine in the play, has suddenly become a favorite in Bellefonte also. Her part is all acted without affectation and with such a show of naturalness as to dispel all that stagey effect that is so marked in many prominent actresses. Mr. Witold performs his part to perfection and, in fact, we are compelled to say there are no novices in Mr. Mayo's Company.

The play was a long one and it was after eleven o'clock when the curtain went down on the last act and so interesting and appreciated was the play that, notwithstanding the fact that the play lasted over three hours, none complained of its being too long. We have taken particular pains to find out the opinions of those who witnessed the play last night and they are all very flattering.

It Is Said,

That this is wet weather.

That the play Thursday night was the best ever seen in this place.

That Col. J L Spangler has a notion to purchase the big flower bed at the P. R. R. depot to put in his yard on Allegheny street.

That there are more Centre county men engaged in the insurance business than any three other counties in the State can muster out.

That from present prospects the entire republican ticket will be elected by a large majority this fall. This is predicted because all the nominees are men of known ability.

That General Hastings' boom for Director of the World's Fair is continually growing, he now having recieved the indorsement of the Pennsylvania and Ohio Congressional delegations.

That Adam Forepaugh, Jr., and John A. Forepaugh have started out to get up a new 4-Paugh circus and menagerie that will eclipse anything ever heretofore exhibited. It will not be put on the road until 1892. Probably these enterprising young men are going to buy the World's fair and make the present committee the leading attraction in their menagerie.

That when Senator Delamater gets rightly started in this fall's campaign he will make the fur fly This can very readily be believed as his visit to Bellefonte, though merely one of social relations, was fraught with much good just because the farmers and laboring men had an opportunity of seeing him. Reason: He is not above talking to any man.

That the $10,000-a-year-salaried-corporation-official-(farmer)-candidate for Governor, Robert E Pattison, will attend the Granger's picnic at Centre Hall next week. Not muchly, we guess. Mr. Pattison is too nice to associate with the farmer at any of their gatherings; but wait until Mr. Pattison comes around holding political meetings for his benefit and then he will not be too nice to have the farmers come to hear him blow. Neither will he be too nice to accept their votes this fall—if he gets them.

The New Scale.

Reference was made on Friday to the fact that the miners gained a victory in the conference held in Altoona on Wednesday and Thursday. We now give fuller particulars, as follows:

The principal advances in the new scale relate to the dead work or taking down of rock and slate which is interspersed with the layers of coal. The advance in this line will be from ten to fifteen per cent in some of the mountain mines while in others it will be no increase at all. Other important changes were the indorsement of the law prohibiting boys under twelve years of age from working in the mines, and the rule that miners shall pay only market price for powder and oil, while their tools must be sharpened as soon as brought to the shop. Mine cars will be weighed and averaged at least once every three months and the scale is to be advanced proportionally with any advance in the price of coal. The scale will go into effect on October 1, and it is thought it will permanently settle the mining difficulties of the State.

The miners have gained a complete victory and they are jubilant over the result. The new scale will affect all miners in the district representing Clearfield, Centre, Cambria, Huntingdon, Blair, Bedford, Jefferson and Indiana counties.

The Milton Fair.

The Milton Fair which will be held on the 30th of September and the 1st, 2nd and 3rd of October, is one of the most flourishing fair associations in the State. The attractions this year surpass all previous efforts. The general premiums are more liberal than heretofore. The entries for trials of speed are highly satisfactory to the management, both as to the number and the character of horses to take part. The citizens purse of one thousand dollars for trotting of the 2:25 class will attract some of the finest horses in the country. In addition to these, the special attractions which have always characterized the association's meetings, will be better than ever. Ex-Governor Pattison and Ex-Senator Delamater, candidate for governor, will be present and deliver addresses. We can assure our readers that if they attend the Milton fair they will have no reason to regret it. All the railroads leading to Milton will run excursion trains and sell tickets at excursion prices.

A Woman's Reasoning.

A lady of Warsaw advertised in the papers that she was willing to accept proposals of marriage, and giving a description of herself, she also enumerated the qualifications she required in her suitor. Among those qualifications she mentioned that he must be the owner of real estate. She received many letters in reply, but one of them was strikingly original. The writer said that hepossessed all that which the lady desired in her future husband. He was good looking, he held a respectable position, he had many friends and was received in good society, and could support a family respectably. As to real estate, he had that too; he was the owner of a plot of ground in a cemetery which was large enough to accommodate him, a wife, and six children. The lady selected the writer of this letter from the whole number of suitors. She opined that a young man of his position who had thought of acquiring graves for himself and a large family before he was married was surely worthy of the endownment of her hand and heart.

—This is a nice beginning for the Grangers picnic. It is another proof that such picnics should be held earlier in the season. It is always more or less disagreeable at this time of the year. Therefore, if the Centre county grange organization would have their annual picnic and exhibition a success in every way they will first have to change the time of holding the same.

A PERTINENT EXPLANATION.

Democrats Themselves the First to Start the $900 Sheriff Deal Story.

SNOW SHOE, Pa., Sept. 13, 1890.

EDITOR DAILY NEWS:—

Your paper of the 11th contains an article, signed "Philipsburg Democrat," in which he says "charges have been made, by the Republican press, that Wm. Ishler's nomination was secured by purchase." Now I want to correct "P. D." so far as to say that the charges orignated with leading and prominent democrats, and, although they may be willing to drop it now, for the good of the party, as they say, the fact still remains that for several days after the convention they made the charge openly. Of course the Republican papers took their word for it, especially when all the circumstances bore testimony to its truth. Ishler's denial goes for nothing. Any one who would make himself a party to such a transaction will deny it when charged therewith. As to proving such charges, any one more than a month old, knows that in the nature of things it can only be done by one or more of the parties to the transaction turning states-evidence. It is not at all likely that Ishler passed his check for $900 to Heinle for value received in delegates but "there are more ways of killing a cat than choking it to death with butter." How about a third party's check or note to Heinle, secured by a 3 or 6 month's note from Ishler to third party? This would make said notes fall due after election and leave no evidence to effect the voter until too late for any one to interest themselves about it.

Every one who knows Heinle, knows that he is not in politics for fun. It is clean business with him, all the time. Now he had been working for this nomination, and expected to get it. During his canvass he spent time and money, and when he saw that the fight between the Meek and Orvis factions would preclude the nomination of either himself or Parker, he looked about to see how he could reimburse himself for his outlay. It could only be done by a trade, and to be of value must be done quickly, before other arrangements were made by other parties. How does this account for the transfer of the 17 delegates so suddenly.

And now one word in regard to these complaisant delegates. While condemning Ishler, Heinle & Co., what are we to say for those men who allow themselves and the voters whom they represent to be bartered and sold in such a manner?

They were instructed to vote for Heinle, but they were under no obligation to place themselves under his orders after his withdrawal; and when, at his dictation, they go over in a body to a candidate that they had been claiming could not be elected, they leave themselves under the suspicion of having been parties to as dirty a trade as that their principals are accused of. However the trade is made, can they deliver the goods? Will the democrats of Centre county allow their votes to be bargained away by these men who boast that they own so many votes, and can do with them as they please? I think not. I believe the honest democratic vote will go for Major Wolfe as a fitting rebuke to the double dealing tricksters who say, they are the party. Let us wait and see if they are!

HONESTY.

The Homicide Case.

In the habeas corpus hearing of John Wilson, which took place on Saturday for the murder of Harry Waterhouse, no new information was divulged. Only two witnesses were heard and on their evidence the prisoner was committed to jail to await his trial which will take place the last week in November. C. P. Hewes and W. F. Reeder, Esqs., have engaged to defend the prisoner, while ex-Judge Orvis has been engaged to assist District Attorney J. C. Meyer for the Commonwealth.

That John Wilson (if such his name may be) is in a bad scrape goes without saying. That a murder was committed and that the prisoner committed the crime can not be denied, the only point in the question is the degree of crime. One thing is certain, the prisoner on Saturday exhibited considerable nervousness during the hearing. He has thus far maintained a complete silence, not even telling his counsel anything regarding himself. The District Attorney informs us that he has some points "dead against" the prisoner but would not give them away until the case came to trial.

Unworthy of Patronage.

The Bicycle Merry-go-round, which has been in Bellefonte for some time, but which this morning pulled up stakes and departed for Centre Hall to be present at the Granger's picnic, is unworthy of patronage and should not be tolerated in a civilized community, let alone at a place like Grange Park will be this week

For some time it had been rumored that all was not right at the Merry-go-round as everything was kept shut up so close at nights and on Sundays. Persons who began to suspect began to watch as well and it was soon found out that the persons in charge—five men in all—enticed young girls to spend the entire night with them in the tent covering the Merry-go-round. On Sunday the police made a raid on the establishment and, found the five men with two young girls one scarcely more than a child. One of the girls was arrested and locked up. The merry-go-round was torn up and this morning taken to Centre Hall As the management have now been warned they should not allow the machine to be set up on their grounds.

A Ride On An Engine.

On Saturday afternoon, desiring to go to Centre Hall, we requested the privilege of riding on the engine. It was cheerfully granted and when the train pulled out over the Lewisburg railroad at 2.30 o'clock p. m.. we were comfortably ensconced on the cushioned seat on the fireman's side of the engine. Since the wreck last week, when fireman Montgomery was injured, engineer Tussey has been taking a vacation and Engineer John E. Calverts and fireman Will Carskadden, of the P. and E. road are in their place, and a more sociable, companionable and jolly crew never mounted an iron horse, while Engineer; Calverts enjoys the reputation of being one of the best engineers on the road and fireman Carskadden fills his position equally as well.

Persons who have never road on an engine as it takes its course through mountain and valley rushing, with wonderful velocity onward into space, with nothing to guide the ponderous pile of living, breathing, snorting, puffing rushing metal but the two small line like rails that wind serpentine fashion in and out and onward through vale and valley, now beside the towering mountain and now through fertile meadows where all the beauties of nature are portrayed, never fully realize their situation; and yet this enormous mass of moving metal plunges forward pulling after it a whole train load, many hundreds perhaps, of human freight, and all dependent for the safety of their lives on that one man who sits at the right hand side of the engine with one hand on the throttle the other on the airbrake and his eye constantly peering ahead to discern that all is right or if, perchance, there may be danger, perhaps death, lurking in the dim beyond. It is a lesson to anyone to take a ride on an engine just to learn the grave responsibility that rests on the shoulders of the engineer and to teach the public to not underrate the man who at all times has their lives in his hands. The ride to Centre Hall was much enjoyed and especially was made more pleasant by the interesting and discriptive information given us by the fireman about railroads engines, engineers, etc.

Welcome Home.

Last Wednesday evening, when John T. Fowler and bride arrived at their pleasant home, Greenwood farm, at Fowler station, they met with a royal welcome. At the elaborate supper prepared, the guests present were the happy couple themselves, Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Beck, parents of the bride; Thomas Balling and daughter. After the supper, between eight and nine o'clock, a crowd of about fifty men, young and old, from the country round, appeared upon the scene and with bells, gongs, and other sweet instruments, they proceeded to serenade Mr. and Mrs. Fowler. John T. Merryman and Samuel Hoover were leaders of the serenaders. In response to repeated calls for bride and groom, Mr. Fowler brought forward a sister of the bride, thinking to have the joke on his friends, but leader Hoover detected the hoax, and with the remark that the lady was not tall enough, raised the cry for the genuine bride to appear. She did so and the crowd was satisfied. The hospitable host of Greenwood farm then provided a palatable lunch for his visitors and the evening passed off very pleasantly.

Death of an Aged Lady.

On Friday evening at 10 o'clock Mrs. Catharine Houser died at her home in Houserville, aged 89 years, 2 months and 18 days. She was the widow of Mr. Martin Houser, who died 33 years ago at the age of 65 years. The deceased was a member of the United Brethren church for the past 71 years and was always to be found in the path of duty.

She was the mother of four children, namely, Mrs. L B McEntire, of Fillmore. Mrs. Catharine Dale, of Houserville; Mr. Samuel Houser, of Upper Sandusky, Ohio; and Mrs. Margaret Coble, who died about 25 years ago. Mrs. Houser was a kind friend, a good neighbor and a loving and affectionate mother. The funeral took place on Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. It was attended by a host of relatives and friends.

RAIN, MUD AND !!!!!

Yesterday It Looked as if It Would be a Nice Week, but Now.—A Good Beginning Until It Rained.

GRANGE PARK, PA., Sept. 16.—Rain! Rain!! Rain!!! It does seem an utter impossibility to hold a granger's picnic in Centre county without being drowned out, or at least spoiled, by rain. Now why is this thus? Is it because of the season, or is it because the grangers of Centre county are not as good as the grangers at Williams' Grove? It certainly can't be the latter reason, hence it must be the former; or else it may be because most all the leaders in Centre county are—democrats. Be that as it may, however, one thing is certain, it's raining this morning and has been ever since four o'clock. Thus far the ground has not become muddy and, save the wetness of the grass and stubbles, the Park has not yet been rendered very disagreeable. The floors in all tents keeps them in a habitable condition so that all one has to do is sit inside the canvass like a caged bird and peek out at the rain, the deserted field, save for the few who struggle around neath umbrella's, and the glorious opportunities there will be for a picnic if it only quits raining and the sun comes out. But one always regrets rain at a picnic, no difference how comfortable the quarters. It is time—valuable time—lost that had been specially set apart by some to make money but by the majority to have lots of fun. The latter should be satisfied, for isn't there lots of fun in being at a picnic such weather as this? But they are not disheartened. About seventy five to a hundred persons came in on the early morning trains which crowd, had it not been for the weather, would have been swelled to ten times that number.

The grounds now present a very picnicing appearance. The large array of private tents stretched three deep on two sides of the ground rise like a white wall of demarkation, and forms a pretty background looking from either the railroad or from Centre Hall. The central and major part of the ground is taken up by exhibition tents, boarding houses, amusements, peanut stands, etc. The headquarters are marked by a large flag floating gracefully in the breeze. Among the exhibitors already on the ground are the following:

Agricultural Experiment Station of State College; J. B. Shannon & Son, of Philadelphia, hardware; Thomas A. Barnes, Philadelphia, groceries; and a clothing house from the same city; Shoop & Mingle, Centre Hall; Ross & Son Embroidering machine; from Bellefonte are McCalmont & Co., D. Garman & Son, James Schofield, and S. M. McQuiston are going to be there. Walter A. Wood, reapers and mowers, and the Planet, Jr., reapers and mowers, have exhibitors on the ground. All the exhibitions are not yet in; it will take all of to-day to get everything rightly arranged.

On Monday the grounds presented a varied and picturesque appearance. Exhibitions, and tents were arriving on all trains and at all hours on foot and by wagon. Men with teams were busy hauling boards and straw and baggage. Beautiful and charming maidens carried plank and all kinds of lumber and were as busy as beavers assisting in the putting to rights of their temporary habitation. The elderly ladies had donned the apron and the cooking cap and were busy preparing something to satisfy the inner man. Exhibitors were busily engaged putting their exhibitions in proper shape. The Merry-go-round man, the dice thrower, the penny-a-ring tosser, the amusement men of every description were busy trying to convince the young and the old that they would make money to patronize them. The lack of music, however, was quite noticeable. One solitary uniformed member of some band was seen idly strolling around but he had neither instrument or information to give the public; it is to be hoped more may turn up ere the exhibition closes.

NOTES.

About the busiest man found on the grounds on Monday was George Boal. It kept him working like a trooper assigning visitors to their respective tents.

Police headquarters are established on the hill near the general headquarters.

The grounds will be lighted at night with an array of oil lamps.

The large pavillion for speaking purposes is located near the centre of the grounds

McCalmont & Co., have the largest exhibit on the grounds, J. B. Shannon & Son the most showy one thus far.

Wreck on the Buffalo Run.

On Tuesday as the Buffalo Run train was coming around the horse shoe bend up the valley the engine run off the track. The fireman was injured though not seriously. It was several hours before things were in shape to convey the passengers to Bellefonte.

Shot at Her Husband.

A correspondent informs us that on Friday evening a four-months old bride, who had already forsaken her husband, shot at him when he went to persuade her to return home. About four months ago Samuel Meyers and a Miss Smith, of Centre Hall, or near there, were married. For some cause there was a separation, and Mrs. Meyers had gone to the home of her mother, Mrs. Smith. On Friday Meyers went to the Smith's home to get his wife when the latter drew a revolver and shot at him but did not hit him. This reception was too "hot" for Samuel and he withdrew.

Personal Pencilings.

Mr. Sweeny, of Centre Hall, was a caller on Saturday.

Mr. Harry Irvin, of Altoona, is visiting friends in Bellefonte.

Mr. William Fravel, of Canton, Ohio, is visiting at the home of Col. Geo. A. Bayard.

Mrs. Julia A. C. Shope, of Milesburg, was in Bellefonte on Saturday and called at this office.

C. S. McCormick, one of the leading members of the Clinton county bar, is in Bellefonte.

We noticed that Mr. Fred Kurtz, Jr. of Centre Hall, took in the play on Thursday night.

Mrs. William Burnett, of West Chester, is visiting her son, Wilmer L. Malin, on Howard street.

Deputy Prothonotary, D. F. Foreman went to Centre Hall on Saturday to remain over Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Bell returned on Friday evening from an extended trip through the west.

Mrs. Charles W. Tripple returned on Thursday from a visit to her brother, Mr. J. Milton Furey, in Lock Haven.

Miss Alice Whippo, one of Port Matilda's charming young ladies, has been visiting friends in Milesburg for a few days.

Misses Mary and Edith Butler, of Philadelphia arrived in Bellefonte on Saturday morning of last week and are now visiting at the home of Clement Dale.

Miss Mattie Cassidy, who has been visiting at the home of Col. Geo. A. Bayard for the past week, departed this morning for her home in Canton, Ohio While here Miss Mattie made many warm friends.

Mr. H. H. McEntire, bookkeeper for James Mansel, lumber dealer of Williamsport, is spending his vacation with his parents at Fillmore. He will also represent the Henry Distin Manufacturing Company, of Williamsport, at the granger's picnic.

Will H. Bosner, who spent last week in Altoona, returned to his home in this place on Saturday evening. It is said that Willie made many young gentlemen friends and as for the girls, why scores of 'em are now shedding bitter tears because of his leaving so soon.

Misses Nannie and Mary Ammerman of Bellefonte, stopped off on their way east, last evening, to see the beauties of our town and Dr. W. H. Flenner and family. Miss Nannie is interested in Presbyterian missionary work in New York city where she has been thus engaged for fifteen years.—Tyrone Herald.

Since Col. J. L. Spangler has been endorsed by his party as its choice for Congress from this district, he has become in a measure a general utility man, so far as public speaking is concerned. If he is pressed in any more engagements he had better stick out a shingle announcing "speaking done on short notice: Anything from the opening of a public school or opera house to the opening of a state or national political campaign done with neatness and dispatch." And we are sure he would become famous in that profession.

Mr. Hugh Taylor, Jr., foreman of the steam heating department of the Logan Machine Works, took his men to Watsontown on Thursday where they will be engaged for several weeks placing steam heat apparatus in a large hotel and business block. Mr. Taylor goes from there to two other towns to start work and will then divide his time among the different places. He enjoys the reputation of being an expert in his line and the amount of steam heat fitting done by his firm is largely due to the prompt and satisfactory manner in which he does it.

Death of Mrs. Foster.

On Monday, about 12 o'clock Mrs. Foster, wife of 'Squire S. J. Foster, died at their residence in this place. Mrs. Foster was an aged lady and has been ill for a long time. The funeral occured on Wednesday, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

—On Monday evening there was another "electrocution" in New York. A lineman was roasted to death before the door of a theatre, right in sight of the amusement loving public who were just leaving the theatre. It is needless to say their mirth was turned to horror.

NOT DROWNED YET.

The Granger Picnic Still Heads Out of Water—The Opening Postponed Until To-day.

GRANGE PARK, Pa., Sept. 16.—Owing to the storm and rain of last night the opening of the Seventeenth Annual Picnic, which was to have taken place, to-day, will not take place until to-morrow. The storm blew the large tent down and rendered it otherwise very disagreeable. For awhile it was thought that Bedlam was let loose. Tents flew in various directions; bedding and tenting paraphernalia were scattered promiscuously around and the poor, forlorn and drenched persons whose shelter was blown away looked too utterly utter to even make known their wants. But notwithstanding the storm and rain by noon the grounds were again in a fair condition, the tents had all been re-erected and everything was in waiting for the opening. It was then announced by those in charge that the managers had decided to defer the opening until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock. Thus far none of the prominent speakers are present.

RAINING AGAIN.

GRANGE PARK, PA., Sept. 17.—Last evening the trains brought in hundreds notwithstanding there was a shower of rain, and more threatened. But the evening was pleasant enough after all. Several thousand people were on the ground wandering around hunting up friends, looking at the exhibitions at night or patronizing some one of the twenty five or fifty fakirs that are scattered from corner to corner and meet you wherever you may happen to go. During the night the weather grew colder and it was generally believed that the rain had ceased and in due time the sun would come out and all would be happy. But everybody was doomed to disappointment.

About eight o'clock this morning the rain again began to descend in bucketsful and barrelsful. The incoming trains brought hundreds of people to the grounds, who had started before it commenced to rain, and who arrived here only to see a dispirited and discouraged crowd of pleasure seekers, but all dead bent on "fighting it out on this line" if it takes all week. Well this really is nice (?) weather for a picnic. Why even the candidates present—and there are quite a number—are not hardened sufficiently to stand it all and yet wear a smooth shirt bosom and a smile on their faces. So you see the situation is becoming desperate and the management equally so as well as very impatient and restless.

Brother Rhone had "loaded his little gun" for war. He had filled it chuck full to the muzzle with Pattison buckshot and the intention was to fire a perfect fusilade into the Delamater ranks all week, but it is plainly evident that either providence or the elements got on to his little racket and are now determined to shield him who was not invited to be present to defend himself. Yesterday we were at a loss to account for the abundance of rain. To-day we think it has been sent as a blessing to prevent the disgorging of too much untruthful democratic campaign politics. Of course, every man is entitled to his own opinion and we hang to ours for the reason that the majority of the speakers selected for this occasion are rank democrats.

It is likely the opening will take place some time to-day—in fact it must or there will be no chance to have a "closing day." It is likely that all speeches will now be short—cut down to suit the circumstances.

—A large audience assembled in the Reformed church on Sunday evening to listen to the choral service rendered by the church choir. This being the second of these musical treats the public went there expecting to hear something par excellence in the musical line and we can safely say they were not disappointed. The choir in the Reformed church has become one of the best musical choirs in Bellefonte and their concert on Sunday night could not have been surpassed.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—U. S. Gov't Report, Aug. 17, 1889.
